Arrest made in Heritage thefts

A warrant for the arrest of Andrew O'Gillvey, ex-news editor of The Beacon, was issued by police for burglary, theft and possession of 11 stolen dorm keys, according to Captain Buzz Mybunns, of the East Haledon Police.

O'Gillvey (pronounced O'Gillvee), on an extended vacation in Rio De Janeiro, was unavailable for comment on the matter.

The transfer student from Monclair State College, which might explain his actions, was charged in the theft of pencil erasers, three paper clips, a box of green jello, a hamper full of dirty laundry and a small Mexican dog.

"I'll never go to school here again," according to Minister of Propaganda Dennis Santillo, whose job is to make the college sound good, which is impossible.

"This O'Gillvey incident will make it hard as hell to sucker any more freshmen into coming to this dump," he said. "That's all off the record," he added.

Bacon staff writer Pull Krull was able to shed more light on the situation. "I thought something funny was up," Krull said. "He was always getting these strange cravings for green jello. I thought he was just strange. Now it seems there was more behind it."

More of the cloud cleared when another Bacon staff writer, who chose to remain nameless, commented on the fact that he was always asking her for paper clips.

"We are pretty sure that he was behind it," said Mybunns, who co-ordinated the investigation with WPC Campus Police. "We observed the suspect, O'Gillvey, trying to buy paper clips in front of the Student Center. We weren't sure that he was involved, but he had paid all his parking tickets, so we suspected him right away," he said.

Repercussions of the warrant are already being felt all over campus. White student groups reacted immediately. "Who the hell gives a damn," said Ian McNotty, president of the White People Who Really Don't Stand for Anything. "As far as we're concerned," he continued, "he's a little too straight laced for our likes, anyway."

O'Gillvey, who is also suspected of being a one-time lead singer in a rock and roll band, is still at large. Authorities advise that students should hide their green jello until he is in custody.

Hi-man bearing child

A source high in the administration has told The Beacon the real reason why school president Seemore Hi-man has gone on sabbatical.

"He's pregnant, he's really pregnant," said Deep Throat. "I know it is hard to believe, but I swear to God it is true. He was feeling sick in the morning all the time, like he was going to vomit, so I told him to go to the doctor. When he came back, he said he was pregnant."

"At first I didn't believe him, but then he started getting bigger and bigger," Deep Throat continued. "It was shocking to see him blow up like he did. I guess he really got his."

School officials refused to comment (what else do they do?), but rumor has it that Hi-man's office is being redesigned with a nursery being put in. Dennis Santillo, the school public relations director, tried to answer this.

"Well, how can I put this. This is a very delicate matter you see. You have to realize that this could be very embarrassing to the school if it came out the wrong way. Are you sure this will be handled in the right way, because..."

The Bacon reporter left to talk to someone else, came back, wrote this very story, and went back to Santillo, who was still saying, "This is a delicate matter."

Questions as to who is the other parent and what will be born are running rampant. If fact, pools have come out for naming the other parent, with the winner being guaranteed at least two hundred dollars.

Among the possible parents listed are the Invisible Man, the Invisible Woman, God and Zeus.

Among the top names for the child are Buster, Sealless and Weirido if it is a boy. Girl's names include Luce, Chase and Bo Derek.

Grad gets paying job

To the astonishment of the WPC faculty, administration and students alike, a WPC grad has attained employment with his WPC degree.

Boris McKowski, a 1983 WPC grad who majored in indecision, has been appointed Assistant Fecal Matter Inspector by Joe's Honeydipper Service of Leonia. "It's a job where I'll be able to get hands-on experience in vital business," said a gleaming McKowski.

McKowski will be garnering $3.50 an hour as he begins his descent down the drain of sewage success. He expects a jump in pay to an enviable $3.65 per hour in January. His boss, Joe Zyxxozito, says this of McKowski: "We're proud to have a man like Boris, you know, with a college education and all. From now on, whenever we need help down here, we're gonna know right where to go — to WPC on graduation day."

The success of McKowski has been universally well-received by WPC's higher-ups, like the college's man-of-only-good-tidings, Propaganda Minister Dennis Santillo, himself a Seron Hall graduate. "For McKowski to be able to achieve the position which he has," Santillo said, "I think it's clearly indicative of what a WPC baccalaureate degree will get you in today's competitive job market."

The ever-smiling Arnold Speert, who's been sort of the college president all year, is also beaming at the new found success of an alumnus. "Six out of ten students need remedial help when they start their collegiate careers here at WPC. We feel this is ostensive proof that progress is being made," Speert said.

V.P. bans breathing

Citing recent fights, vandalism, a missing chicken parts that have jeopardized student safety, Vice-President in charge of Fun and Games Dominic Backgammon has banned all breathing activities on campus until further notice.

Students caught breathing during the ban are subject to possible dismissal and their lungs will be confiscated, according to Dennis (the Menace) Armadillo, director of college sex and relationships.

Campus air space will remain open during the ban, but will not serve clean air. "The air available during the ban will be like breathing through a dirty sock in downtown Newark in 100° weather," Backgammon said. A campus visit by the Fresh Air Fund has been cancelled.

"This campus is not just for breathing. All I'm trying to do is make it livable," Backgammon stated at a recent meeting. "I can't believe the kids today," Backgammon continued. "All they want out of life is fast cars, cheap thrills and to sit around breathing all the time. I don't know what the world's coming to. We can't stop them from breathing off campus, but here at WPC we must stress breathing safety."

In a private moment Backgammon stated off the record, "Personally this breathing ban is great! I've always wanted to take people's breathing away." Everybody has their dream.

Backgammon has asked for students to participate in four task forces to examine breathing activities during the ban. Each group will be chaired by various administrators.

Each task force will examine possible solutions to the problem, such as a campus-wide respiratory policy, tightened collegiate shirt collars, and an ongoing inhalation program. They will then offer their suggestions to Backgammon, who will promptly chuck them out the window.

"We're not looking to suffocate the whole campus permanently, only to enforce breathing responsibility," Backgammon said.

"Students must assume more responsibility," said Armadillo. "There is room for better breathing attitudes."

"A small minority of students and outsiders caused this problem, and the majority suffer for it," Backgammon said. "Visitors were responsible for the loss of air outside the residence hall two weeks ago and for breaking a resident assistant's nostrils before the semester began," he stated.

The campus needs a "change in all the bad breath that's been going around," Backgammon said. He stated that the breathing ban is necessary and that if the students don't react responsibly they will have Orson Welles imposed upon them.

Senior Class President Yogi Farrararara wants all students to remember now that uncouth behavior on campus reflects badly on the reputation of WPC as an educational institution for virtuous and pure-minded young scholars. "After all, we're here to learn, not act like a bunch of silly babies in diapers," he said, seen here lecturing an Animal Sexuality class.

Que Pasa Zenyatta Mendatta

WPC is finally accepting the reality of Hispanic strength on campus. The newly appointed president of WPC, Benito Perez Diaz Fernandez, has asked the governor to officially change the school's name to Colegio Hispano de Wayne, Nueva Jersey. The dramatic change has developed slowly, but finally has arrived.

El Faro (The Beacon), now advertising only Goya products, has grown to become the number one newspaper of northern New Jersey for students. It is read by over 200,000 students in area colleges. It is still written in English due to the demands of several non-bilingual students that still remain.

There are still a few non-Hispanic employees or teachers on campus. Most have changed their names and are fluent in Spanish. To name a few - Michele Gregoria, special events office; Dr. Samuel Silasita, dean of students; and Mr. Jackson, journalism professor, who also teaches Spanish for freshmen.

Two others who stand out are Juana Gato, secretaria para el Gobierno de Estudiantes (SGA secretary) and Enrique Morris, director de actividades estudiantas (director of student activities). Sra. Gato still recalls when Carmen Reyes and five other legislators made an Hispanic difference. Now at the end of every legislature meeting a Salsa and Merengue party begins. Sra. Gato has also programmed her memory writer to write in both Spanish and English.

Sr. Morris has remained the director of student activities for his constant devotion to the growth of all students. His office is now run by the Gonzalez family, who has helped so many Mexicans successfully cross the border and take mini-courses in English and Marriage for Citizenship.

Gloria Herrera, past president of OLAS, returned and was appointed chairperson of the South American Department of Culture and Language. Each region, South America, the Caribbean, Central America, Mexico and Spain, are separate departments. A culture major will examine one or all of the regions. With this major, a new field of jobs for citizens with an interest in preserving culture has opened.

The Rec Center, now a Caribbean Dance Studio, is flourishing and the number of dance majors is growing. Every year dancers from all around the world come to perform in the Caribbean Dance Studio. These performances give great incentive to young dancers and they look forward to examining culture through dance.

"Now after the appointment of the Hispanic president to WPC and the probable change of the school's name, this school will continue to progress," said Dr. Juan Martinez, vice president of cultural events. The school presently has a population of about 25 thousand students and has grown each summer by constructing more buildings along the perimeter of the college where the shuttle bus travels hourly.

Wife, mom, student and commie killer

Being a wife and mother is tough. Doing it while going to college is even tougher, but doing both and still finding the time to fight communist aggression in Afghanistan is something special.

Dolores Finarple, a full-time student majoring in Strategic Nuclear Weapons Sales, leaves her studies and family behind each summer to fight the Red Army in the hills of Afghanistan. This will be the third straight summer she has done this.

"Butch," as she is known to her friends, is very proud of how she spends her summers. "It's a big part of my life," she said. "Nothing makes me more excited than when I can shoot a commie. I particularly like to shoot them right in the little red star on their funny little hats. That just makes my day."

Finarple, who has three children, became hooked on a life of military action many years ago. "Some years ago, I bought my oldest boy, Elwood, a G.I. Joe doll. Damned if I didn't play with the damn thing more than the kid did."

"Pretty soon, I was reading Soldier of Fortune regularly, and I was even on their mailing list."

Still, Finarple stayed at home. "I really didn't think much about getting involved with the blood and guts of the situation."

Then prompted by her husband, who wanted to goof off, Finarple enrolled at WPC to start her own career. She wandered around the college, looking for some direction. She eventually fell into a major she was comfortable with. Still, she really wasn't too interested in taking real action against communism.

"To tell the truth," she said, "I really didn't think much about killing commies until I came into contact with members of the Student Mobilization Committee."

"After I met those clowns from the SMC, I knew I had to do something," she said.

She stated her fighting career in 1979, when she went to Nicaragua to fight against the Sandanistas. Although her side lost, she still calls the jungles of the small Central American country one of her most treasured memories. "I'll find it hard to forget the stench, the disease, the insects — it was Heaven."

After Nicaragua, she didn't have long to wait for another opportunity to fight. "I went to Afghanistan in 1980. I was among the first Americans to visit Afghanistan that year. In fact, it was me who gave Dan Rather the hashish there was so much fuss about."

1981 was a disappointment for her. She was injured in a spring break coup d'état, effectively knocking her out for the summer. "Then in 1982 I had my third child, Hillary, and was unable to fight that year either."

She came back in force in the '82 campaign, leading a counterattack that made many people question whether the Russians were slipping. "That was a really great way to come back. It meant a lot to me."

She had another strong season in 1983, taking out a tank unassisted. "I'm really looking forward to this year. I think we can drive those commie devils out of the country."

Even if she can't drive them out, America must sleep better at night knowing she's on the job.

Andropov appointed Trustee

In a move which may have surprised a few, the Board of Trustees name late Soviet Premier Yuri Andropov to the post of WPC president.

Trustee Rubin "Hurricane" Carter, a famous local citizen, said a long search was undertaken to find the ideal candidate for the post. "We really considered Howard Hughes," he said, "but the board didn't feel he'd have the administrative experience of an Andropov."

The fact that Andropov died last October, or November, or somewhere around there, and has never been to the campus, hasn't discouraged the WPC administration, as the existence of the last WPC president, Seymour Hyman, has been debated for some time. "We know Hyman has never actually been on campus. Whether Hyman ever actually existed or not is something that will be the subject of debate for years to come," said College Relations man Dennis Santillo.

Andropov, who is expected to assume the presidential post in September, was unavailable for comment.

One person who's certainly delighted about Andropov's appointment is Director of Security Bart Scudieri. "With his having been head of the KGB for twenty years, I'm sure we can expect a great increase in our security force here at the college," said

Scudieri. "As a matter of fact, students won't even know who the new security people will be. They may be your best friend in chemistry, or that girl you picked up at the pub last night."

One matter Andropov is expected to act upon is the UNJ proposal, which is supposed to unite all the state colleges and provide work for the college stationery printer. Andropov, if we can trust his past, will scrap the "UNJ" moniker and simply rename the colleges the "USSR," for University of Soviet Socialist Republic, with each college becoming a semi-autonomous republic under the umbrella of a state university, being run by a central mismanagement which will probably be in Trenton, a city as charming as Moscow in February. WPC would probably be called the William Paterson Soviet Socialist Republic, or WPSSR.

Meanwhile, one person who's quite annoyed over Andropov's appointment is Irwin Nack, union president and Marxist.

"For years I've been getting on the nerves of the administration and generally saying the most foolish things anyone could ever conceive of. With a Marxist president at the college, my purpose here will be obsolete. I intend to fight this appointment tooth and nail," Nack stated.

SMC, Young Reps to merge soon

In a surprise move, the Student Mobilization Committee, previously known for its liberal political leanings, and the Young Republican club have decided to merge and form the S.M.C.R.C., according to Co-presidents Bruce Belly-stary and Joe Spinbelli.

Belly-stary revealed the reason for his sudden decision. "After years of searching I have found that I am the illegitimate son of Ronald Reagan and June Allyson. Belly-stary said he had always thought there was a family resemblance but dismissed it, knowing Reagan was a staunch Republican.

Reagan could not be reached for comment but June Allyson, Reagan's co-star in Bedtime for Bonzo, disclosed to Bacon reporters that she and Reagan had a brief affair while filming. "I was going to keep little Bruce until I noticed the strong resemblance he had to Bonzo!" she sobbed.

Spinbelli said he agreed to the merger hoping to get closer to an actual relative of his idol, Ronald Reagan.

The S.M.C.R.C. plans on endorsing Reagan for president if he adopts Jesse Jackson as his son. Spinbelli said it would exemplify Reagan's feelings towards blacks while Belly-stary said, "It would show that I still belong to the only truly progressive club on campus."

Everything you wanted to know about tennis

but were afraid to ask

What should I know about tennis?

Whatever is necessary to make tennis a satisfying and pleasurable experience.

How big should a tennis racket be?

It seems that everyone is preoccupied with this topic. They think that the only way to score well in tennis is with a big "Head" price style racket. This simply is not true. Many people with considerably less impressive equipment are extremely successful tennis players. Commented one woman, "My husband and I play tennis every chance we get. He sports only a normal size racket, but he's wonderful. God, he can pick his shots!" Just remember: It's not the size of the racket but the spin of the balls.

My wife and I play tennis together about three times a week, and I put my all into every game. The problem is, after three sets I'm usually very tired, while my wife is ready to play again. What should I do?

Maybe your wife is not as satisfied with the match as you are. Remember her feelings. Rather than dashing off for an obligatory B.S. session with the guys about how great your serve was, sit down and talk to your wife about the experience. Sometimes that can make all the difference in the world.

The other day I caught my eleven-year-old in the closet by himself, playing a game of video "PONG". Is this normal?

Perfectly normal for someone of his age. Youngsters are ordinarily quite curious about tennis and it's only natural that they will want to experiment on their own. As long as he knows that "PONG" is just a substitute, your son will be alright. I advise you not to worry. It's a stage he will grow out of. (This also applies to those of you who accidentally discover stacks of tennis magazines in your children's underwear drawers. It's nothing to fret over.)

My boyfriend takes me to play tennis several times a week. While he has fantastic games every time, I can never seem to score a point. What's wrong?

Probably nothing. Everyone is capable of scoring points. It's simply a matter of patience. I know of one woman who could never seem to get even a single ball in bounds. The dilemma upset both her and her husband. It finally reached the point where she would lie about where the ball had landed when her husband hadn't been looking, and claim that she'd hit it in. But faking points is not a proper solution — patience is. Relax, your point will come.

Is the first tennis experience usually painful?

It can be. Tennis employs a unique combination of muscles, some of which may never have been used before. First-timers may develop some soreness. On the other hand, the racket itself may be a source of pain. Often the handle is the incorrect size. A simple handle pad may do the trick, but, occasionally the only solution is to keep practicing up against the wall.

I probably whack the ball down the court faster than anyone I know. Why aren't I scoring well?

Velocity is not the key to successful tennis. A lot goes on between the time the ball leaves your racket and when it smashes down again onto the opposite court — make use of that time. Never underestimate the value of "Floor-play" — the subtle twists, spins and gyrations a ball can make when it hits the court surface. Sometimes it can mean the difference between multiple points and no points at all.

I have no problem getting points, but I only seem to get them during the practice volleys instead of during the real game. What should I do?

You have fallen prey to a very common condition known as "premature-point-tabulation." Untreated, it's a condition that can cause embarrassment as well as prevent you from scoring well. Fortunately, there are ways of dealing with it. Try to curb your enthusiasm during practice — only use that time to loosen up. You might also consider not practicing at all — get right into the game. Then those practice points won't go to waste.

What can you tell me about professional tennis players?

Professional players have reached such a high level of proficiency that, quite simply, they are paid to play tennis. Often, they have developed excellent racket control so they can spin the ball which allows them to get the points every time. For this reason, they are commonly called hookers.

How should I educate my children about tennis?

Don't hesitate to bring them down to the courts someday. Better they should get their information there than in a racquetball club.

Bacon takes a dive services" he offered actually were by continually propositioning the pitcher. He also made repeated references as to what the 44 on his shirt really stood for. The Bacon team voted unanimously that it was, indeed, millimeters.

Some highlights of the game were when Armonaitis hit Will "Where's your hat?" Myers with a line drive. Octavio "In English, please" De la Suarez said. "It sounded like wood on wood." This, however, could not possibly be true because Myers was hit in the leg, not the head.

Coda threw a 3-hitter while The Bacon team made several dozen errors to cost her the victory. Baccollo was quoted as saying, "You baffle me as a pitcher."

Armonaitis was the top hitter for The Bacon, going 3-5 with one run scored.

When asked if the administration would play The Bacon again, Curt "The Young One" Clauss responded, "Hell, no. We were lucky to get out of there alive."

Armonaitis, The Bacon's general manager, had this to say about the administration team. "At least they showed up, unlike WPSC, who claimed it was too nice a day to play softball last Sunday."

Barbosa sheriff, Scudieri canned by WPC

My how things are changing!
Head athletic trainer Toby Barbosa has been named sheriff of WPC, replacing security director Bart Scudieri, who was released last week. While details are sketchy as to why Scudieri was released, it is rumored that something about a Sherman tank, machine guns and controlling dorm students was mentioned.

Barbosa, nicknamed Wahoo, is a law and order practitioner known for throwing injured athletes out of the trainer's room for urinating in the whirlpool bath, promises to bring some sense of order to WPC.

"I have already come up with a solution for the problem of students parking in faculty spots," Barbosa said. "We will institute the death penalty for parking offenders. In one month we will have gotten rid of enough people so that nobody has to park in lot six. We won't tolerate any appeals system, either," the six-foot giant said. "All appeals will have to be made through me, and only through me. I do not think anybody is tough enough to tangle with me."

The reaction to Barbosa's appointment has been met with mixed reactions.

"Oh my God! That is not even funny," said one unnamed football player. "He will be unbearable. He has so many damn rules, it will be like a concentration camp!"

The student started to say more, but the line was suddenly dead, and no trace of him has been found.

Another unnamed source, this one in the athletic department, was ecstatic.

"This is great. Now we won't have to be worried about the constant hassles that we get at games," said the unnamed coach. "If a player on another team starts getting loud, we will just have Toby pull his sidearm and take care of him. Nobody will mess with the Pioneers anymore."

Barbosa himself is a little confused as to why he was chosen.

"Maybe it was because they knew that I was popular with some of the students, and they figured by making me director of security that I would lose some of that popularity. But I have some surprises for them. I won't bother students drinking in the dorms if they behave themselves. I won't have the officers busting people's chops for the sake of it."

"But what I will do is start cracking down on some of these administrators who break campus laws and get away with it. Anyone who is doing something he shouldn't be doing, especially an administrator is in trouble."

The general student body has been too unruly to get a reaction from. When Barbosa took over, the school had been plagued by two straight weeks of partying and most of the campus has been too drunk to even care who is in charge.

Super Bowl loses out to RV show

The Bacon has learned, through extraordinary means, that the 1985 Super Bowl, originally scheduled for Wightman Field, has been switched to Pasadena, California, because the field is being used for a Recreational Vehicle show.

School officials are refusing to comment, but an unnamed source is blaming the scheduling department. They claim that the scheduling department knew the Super Bowl was supposed to be played here, but went ahead and scheduled the show anyway. The NFL supposedly had been late in sending in a verification for the dates so the schedulers chose a weekend for them.

Head basketball coach John Adams, when informed of this, was not all that surprised that the mishap happened.

"It sounds somewhat familiar. It really does," said Adams. "Nothing around here would surprise me. We don't even get a break on the damn things."

Russ Mensch, sports information director at WPC, also commented on the situation.

"Good, real good," Mensch said. "They didn't even tell me it was coming here in the first place. Nobody ever tells me anything around here." Mensch also complained that Ivory Benson, the women's basketball coach, talked too much and that his loud voice was especially annoying.

Dominic Backgammon, vice president in charge of fun and games, would not comment directly on the subject, but was the only administrator who would talk to Bacon reporters. "Get the — out of my office," Backgammon said.

Athletic Director Art Eason also refused to comment on the fact that WPC would be entering the USFL later in the year.

"We don't want to downgrade our schedule by joining the USFL," he said. "Besides, we have a commitment to the USFL next season."

Bacon takes a dive

The Bacon feels obliged to report the following results to Sunday's softball game: Administration — 21, Bacon — 3. Now you may be asking yourself how a bunch of 18-22 year old students can lose to a bunch of old, washed-up administrators. Well, it wasn't easy.

The Bacon always tells the truth no matter how embarrassing it may be, so here it goes. The paper has learned that three of The Bacon players, left fielder and second baseman Chip Armonaitis, pitcher Kathy Coda, and right fielder and second baseman Dennis Eisenberg all took pity on the administration and threw the game after the second inning with the score tied 3-3.

"We took pity on them because we know this is all they have to look forward to in their lives," said Armonaitis. "They all showed up rested because they had gone to bed early the night before. We, on the other hand, were all hung over and still tied them right up until the third inning. We figured they needed all the help they could get," he added.

The pitiful administration team was lead in hitting by Art "The Short Guy" Eason and Mark "Your-gray-is-distinguished-looking" Evangelista. The top fielders were Mike "Moneybags" Driscoll and John "Psychedelic Shorts" Adams, who managed to field despite carrying two basketballs in his T-shirt. Dominic Baccollo gave his vocal support because his hitting was a dismal 1-6. The administration also used a mystery catcher. The mystery was why he was catching, as he didn't catch anything except for one ball, and it wasn't with his glove.

Baccollo, vice president of student services and Warlord from the Valley of the Trolls, set out to define what the "student

Adams a dummy

In a startling development The Bacon has learned that head basketball coach John Adams is actually a ventriloquist's dummy, with his brother Richard working the strings. (See photo next to story.)

The development has come as a shock to many people in the WPC community.

"It is absolutely amazing," said Dominic Baccollo, who worked with Adams as assistant dean of students. "Now I know why he never smiled."

"I never had a tougher time getting anybody to smile," said Will Colfunk, the WPC photographer. "It is starting to make sense now."

Art Eason, the WPC athletic director, was shocked and angry by the development.

"To think we have been fooled for so long, it is unreal," Eason said. "It is criminal to think that someone could get away with something like this."

While school administrators refused comment, Dennis Santillo said that criminal action is not being considered.

This is da editorial

The Bacon is meant to be fun. That is what it is here for. So if you can not take a joke, then you deserve to be insulted by what is written here. Lighten up a little guys, because unfortunately, some of this could be taken seriously if you don't. If you can't take a joke then come on up to the Bacon office and make my day.
