Highman leaves WPC in a blaze of glory

BY HUNTER S. TOMPSON

"I have finally figured out what I want to do with my life. I am going to become a peyote farmer and follow the Grateful Dead around the country on a motorcycle until they die," ex-President Seemore Highman said. "The deadheads are the only ones who will accept me at my age. Other bands such as Van Halen and Def Leppard are full of these young punks who can't handle their drugs," he added.

It all started, Highman said, when Terry Tripmaster spiked his Geritol with LSD in 1976 before the Dead concert in Shea Auditorium.

"As I sat unobtrusively in the back aisles of Shea that night, I entered Jerry Garcia's consciousness and he told me of the cosmic vistas I must venture toward."

"This reporter then watched in horror as Highman opened his shirt to reveal a peace sign and a dove tattooed to his flabby chest."

So he sold his pink Potamkin Cadillac and bought a hog, which Dominic Buffalo let him hide in his garage for the last nine years.

Ex-President Highman heads out west to farm peyote buttons.

When this reporter asked Highman why he wasted nine years at WPC he responded by sucking loudly on a jambo spleef and pointed to a yellowed Village Voice that was crudely taped to the wall of his office. It read: Do it Yourself Peyote Farms, $350,000, Pays Itself Back in Two Years.

"I thought, how could I make this kind of heavy bread? The first thing that came to my consciousness was 'president of a college'. Wow, it blew my mind," Highman said.

So he sapped the Foundation for all he could until he had enough to buy the peyote farm. "I'll call it 'See More Spores,'" he said.

At this point, Highman took out a large wooden box which he had hidden in a secret compartment in his desk. When he opened the drawer, a thick pungent hallucinogenic odor filled the room. "Check out these spores," Highman said. "They started sprouting last week and I did this to celebrate."

This reporter then watched in horror as Highman opened his shirt to reveal a peace sign and a dove tattooed to his flabby chest. "It hurt like hell," he said.

Highman then reached into the wooden box and plucked off a few prize spores, the largest of which he offered to this reporter, thus ending the interview.

Ed Norton working in front of Student Center.

Ed Norton to speak at commencement ceremony

BY BO NHED

In a major change of college policy, the administration has granted the senior class one of their requests for a commencement speaker.

"We originally wanted an esoteric academic-type speaker but decided Norton would have to do because commencement is only three weeks away," said Arnold Smurf, vice president of unacademic affairs.

President Cyborg Heinman found Ed Norton working in a ditch in front the Student Center during one of his daily public good-will appearances and asked him what he was doing on the 23rd. Ed said that once the couplings were joined, he would be free for the afternoon.

"Actually, Norton isn't a bad choice because he will help improve the college's slipping image. Ed Norton is a household word these days, and he is sure to put WPC back on the map," Smurf added.

Senior Class President Austin Healy said she was pleased that the administration decided to take the seniors' requests seriously without blowing them off entirely.

Norton then asked if they could release balloons at the ceremonies, but Heinman told him he was being childish.

Senior Class Vice-President Christina Grapefruit challenged the denial, and Heinman then agreed to release the balloons "but only after dark," he said.

Some seniors who had never heard of Ed Norton or the Honeymooners expressed dissatisfaction with the choice. Smurf countered the attack by saying that commencement is not really for the students anyway, and they should be glad they're even getting one.

Some of the choices for a speaker that declined the offer were Claus Von Bulow, Bernard Goetz, The Mills Brothers, Pia Zadora, Brother Bruno and Peter Tosh.

COOKING SUGGESTIONS

PAN FRY

Place slices in cold frying pan. Cook over low heat. Turn frequently and allow to brown evenly on both sides. Remove from pan and drain on absorbent paper.

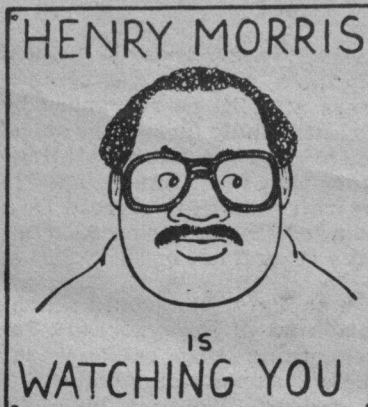

BAKE

Lay slices on wire rack in shallow baking pan. Bake in hot oven (400°F.) until slices are crisp (12-15 min.) Do not turn during baking. Excellent method for large quantity.

BROIL

Preheat broiler to 350°F. Arrange bacon slices on broiler rack and place 4-5 inches below heat. Broil 4-5 minutes, until bacon is crisp and golden brown. Turn only once.

Pear Advisement

The questions and answers appearing in this column are supplied by the Pear Advisement/Information Center located in Raubinger Lobby, Room 107, 595-2727. Operating hours: 24 a day or by appointment.

1. The pear trees in my yard are getting attacked by ravenous birds. Should I make a scarecrow to get rid of them or should I just shoot the little bastards?

Recent tests have shown that both methods you mentioned will fail. Try playing songs from the We Are The World album at high volume. Although this may seem useless at first, the birds will soon be vomiting and taking suicidal nose-dives to the ground. Reports of humans executing these acts have been reported around the globe, so the same method should work for birds.

2. I'm in the Humanities Pear Program. Do I receive a special diploma?

What? Are you joking? Give me a break! Don't bother us with such silly questions — the man to see is Mark Evangelista, the registrar (if you can get in touch with him, of course).

3. The Pear Awards ceremony is coming up next month. Who will the guest speaker be?

Some dude from the group Pears for Fears will be doing the honors. No one in pear advisement has ever heard of him, so there's no reason to look forward to it. Chip Armonaitis was originally scheduled to speak but is busy organizing his "Three in a Row" club for retarded basketball players.

4. What is the best way to preserve pears for the winter break?

Submerge them in large amounts of cheap beer and place the jars on a plane for Ft. Lauderdale.

Administrative attrition plagues college

BY BYE BYE

Due to the continuing departure of administrators, Mark Slanders, newly elected SGA president, has announced plans for an Administrator Orientation Program to begin next fall.

According to Slanders, "Administrators come to school, do their work and get back into their cars and go home. We need to bond administrators to the school," he said.

The current rate of administrative attrition at WPC is 20 percent. The national rate is 5 percent.

This semester, Gay Hollowleg, director of Prisoners Life; Mary Morechesty, assistant warden of Heritage Block; SeemoreHeiney, president of Bill on the Hill; Alvin Shinnsplint, dean of the school of science and hotel management; Slam Silo, dean of future deviants; Hairy Moss, feed service director; and Barf Studfairy, director of WPC Intelligence Agency, have left or will leave their administrative positions.

Next semester each administrator will be attached to his chair with a chain long enough to move freely around campus, according to Slanders. "This will give administrators mobility without leaving their job," said Slanders.

In an exclusive interview with a Bacon reporter, KILL-A-HERD

The Bacon/Loosan Gout

"You wouldn't expect me to walk all the way to Heritage Hall from Lot 2, would you?" said Mary Marcheesy, assitant director of Housing. Marcheesy said she knows parking is a problem at the Apartments, and that is why she has a key to the basketball court. When asked why she doesn't unlock the gate for students to park there as well, she responded with her usual favorite statement: "You can't compare us to the student population."

Senate expected to vote

BY G. EEMAN

After discussing the problems inherent in the current GE requirements, and last year's requirements, and the year before, the Faculty Senate has announced that they will vote on a proposal sometime within the next four years.

"Since the idea behind general education is to insure all students of a broad education, we are proposing that no student graduate until they have taken every course at WPC," said Melvin Meddlestein, chairman of the undergraduate council.

He said this would eliminate the need for both the General Education Committee and the Vice President of Academic Affairs, who are currently responsible for deciding what courses go on the GE list.

GEC Chairman Bob Zing said he liked the idea but was concerned about his committee's loss of power under the proposed change.

"I'm glad to see they are getting something done, and I can't wait to get their proposal on my desk," said Arnold Spirit, vice president of academic affairs.

Spirit, who has the power to accept or reject any recommendations made by the Faculty Senate, said he will most likely approve any proposals that make it into his office because it would take too long to go through the Senate a second time.

Rec Center leaves town

BY BOB BYLINE

In response to the recent criticisms concerning the amount of off-campus programming at the Rec Center, Lee Eelskin has announced that the Rec Center will change its name to Meadowlands West and sever itself from the college completely.

"It was either open it up to students and lose money or quell the criticisms and go whole hog into off-campus programming," Eelskin said.

In order to keep those few students who have expressed an interest in the Rec Center out of the facility, they will install an electric barb-wired fence around the building and, if necessary, hire a South American mercenary unit to patrol the area, he added.

When questioned about the possible misuse of Student Center fees, which originally funded the building's construction, Eelskin replied that it is "too bad" and said the college's image is more important than its students.

"Once we have established All-Star Wrestling as a permanent weekly event, the college's academic reputation will soar and thus a WPC diploma will be worth more in the public's eye," said Will Dickerman, WPC Foundation director.

"Besides, President Highman wanted it that way," he added.

Advisors to use stun guns

BY MISTER RODGERS

Faculty advisors will be equipped with stun guns and course request cards beginning in the fall, according to Marky Vangelista, WPC registrar.

"We are hoping to encourage higher academic standards by having students really see their advisors and having students subject to physical injury if they fail to maintain a satisfactory grade point average," said Vangelista.

When asked if he thought the new program would be effective, Vangelista informed us that the stun guns had been used experimentally on a few students chosen at random last semester. "The results have been fantastic. The average increase in GPA was 2.7," said Vangelista.

One of the students who participated in the initial SG/CRC program experiments said, "I've never wanted to do homework before, but now I usually hand assignments in early." Before the student doubled over in pain he added, "I love WPC."

"The stun gun represents WPC's devotion to getting the most out of students by utilizing what today's technology has to offer," Vangelista said.

Vangelista was hesitant to comment on any of the drawbacks inherent in the program, but he admitted that during registration period, "the snapping sounds and the smell of burning flesh might disturb a few classes, but if that's what it takes to charge students up, I say 'go for it.'"

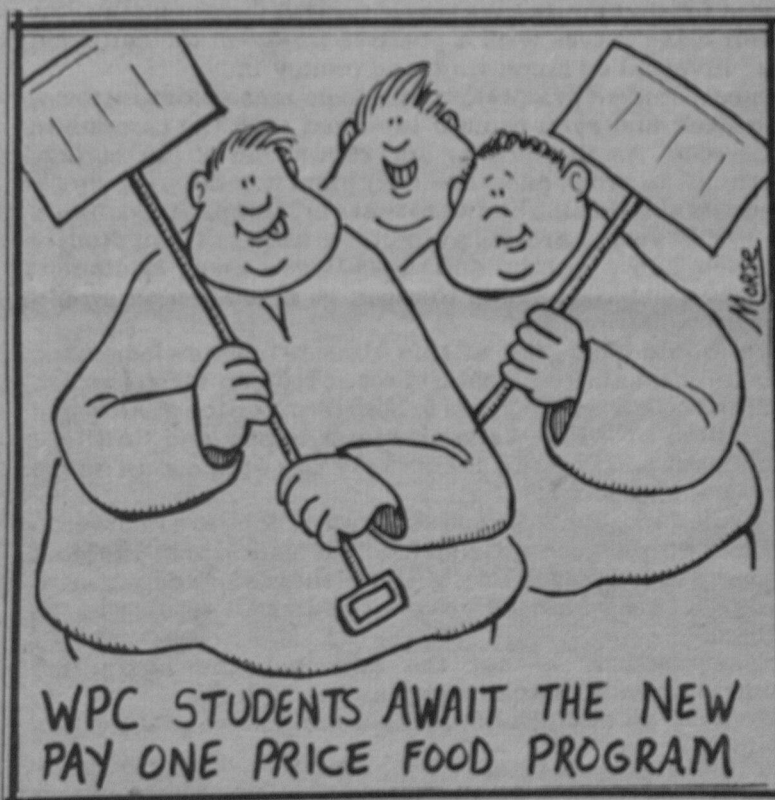

Vice President of Unacademic Affairs Arnold Smurf demonstrates the new stun gun advisement procedure on student volunteer Karl Scheiner.

The Bacon/Pawn Bendings

"I have a dream," said SAPB President Carey McCall during a recent speech on student apathy. "I have been to the top of the mountain and seen student activism and involvement on the other side," he added. McCall, a resident of Heritage Hall, then got into his car and drove home for the weekend.

All in jest

As you have flipped through the last few pages, you may have detected a small change from our usual format. Although this may not come as a surprise to many of you, a bit of explanation may serve to cool some tempers.

First, the material contained within this issue, The Bacon, is, with the exception of a few advertisements and this editorial, entirely fictitious and created for general amusement and light reading during the difficult culminating weeks of the school year.

Secondly, you may have detected a note or two of sarcasm in a few stories, and we realize that we may have tread on some sensitive areas. It is not our intention, however, to defame or mitigate anyone's reputation or position, and we sincerely hope that all references to particular people and issues are taken with the utmost humility.

Lastly, we hope our readers have enjoyed reading The Bacon as much as we have enjoyed putting it together. We would like to encourage that any comments and criticisms, whether they be positive or negative, be communicated to us so that we may know whether our efforts are worth continuing in the future.

See you in the fall

Since this is our last issue for the 1984-85 school year, we would like at this time to congratulate the graduating seniors and wish them the best of luck in their futures, whatever they may be, and hope they have gotten the best that WPC has to offer.

Although our college does have its problems, as do most others for that matter, we would nonetheless hope that the senior class leaves with a positive image of the college it has invested so much time and money in.

Once a student graduates there is no reason for him to not look back and even remain involved with the campus in some way. As the quality and reputation of our college continues to grow, everyone's diploma will be worth more. Students should also be aware that our Alumni Association is trying very hard to promote a sense of community between WPC's alumni and the college as well as current students, and all the help that can be given to them would greatly benefit us all.

We would also like at this time to acknowledge and sincerely thank President Seymour Hyman for all he has done in the last seven years to help improve the quality and reputation of WPC. We wish him a happy and fulfilling retirement and hope he did not take any of that stuff on the front page seriously!

Further, more thanks and congratulations are in order to the many professors retiring from their service at WPC this year and especially to Ray Miller of the history department who is leaving after 40 years of dedicated service to the college.

Remember, it is not the end, but the beginning. Congratulations, thanks again and good luck.

We wish all of you a happy summer and we will see you again next Fall.

Letters to the Editor

I won't doubt you anymore

Editor, The Bacon,

I've been reading The Bacon's letters to the editor section for a number of years, and I always thought they were dreamed up by the editor until I had an experience last week that changed my mind.

I was doing some landscaping work on a rather big suburban house. The home was owned by a beautiful blonde. She saw how hard I was working and came outside with a big pitcher of lemonade. I stopped my work when I saw her walking toward me. She was wearing a pair of very risqué denim shorts and a see-through blouse.

Seeing that I needed more than lemonade, she offered to give me a massage. I gratefully obliged and assumed the position of her couch. She gently stroked my shoulder. After a few minutes I was really getting worked up. She was a very sensitive woman and she knew just the thing I needed. She went to her bookshelf and pulled out a big black box. She opened the box and showed me what was inside. As I peered into the box, my mouth began to water, and my heart was beating to the beat of the band.

"Sure you can handle it?" she asked.

"I think so, if you help me," I said.

She pulled out the first object. It was a copy of Essence. I fondled the pages, so smooth and firm. Then she pulled out a back issue of The Bacon. I was in heaven. "So you want to see it?" she said.

"Sure," I gulped. And then right before my eyes, she showed me her long, luxurious, delicious letter to The Bacon editor. Gentlemen, you can figure it out for yourselves. And that is why I will never again doubt the letters to the editor.

Kissinger gets last word

Editor, The Bacon,

At this point in time I would like to say that there are rumours about me dropping my drawers at my speech here at WPC were totally fabricated by the slimy student press. I would never resort to such gags when giving a speech. Of course, in the past I have occasionally utilized some shtick when meeting with foreign dignitaries and South American dictators. But I was aware that the students of William Paterson College would not appreciate comedy when they were vying for a political rap. And that is what I gave them. If they are reprimanding me for flashing my genitals once for yes and twice for no, then they are not not aware of a new international code for a hearing impaired. If they call that pornography, or "dropping my drawers," I wish them all unsuccessful facial operations and radiation sickness.

Debate goes on ... who cares?

Editor, The Bacon,

I am asking for a formal apology from Mr. Baylor and all the know-it-all run-the-world-in-a-day cronies that he hangs around with for all the abuse they have given to the school and those who selected the lecturers for the Distinguished Lecturer Series.

Mr. Haig is a good guy. I know him well. He would be very upset to hear all the unfounded criticism that has been displayed on this campus of late.

mouths, so in that sense you are right. My friends and I would like to see a new government in place of your cut-throat, jump-at-the-gun, combat-snarling slugs who want to push Holocaust reeking weapons on the people who don't know what is going on in the world. Your friend Al should stay where he belongs — in this great country where you eat processed foods, crushed fruit and sugar, and guzzle gas in your use-up-all-the-energy-in-the-world-so-no-one-else-can-use-it cars.

David Baylor
Senior, Know-It-All

Editor, The Bacon,

Since you or all your know-it-all friends won't address the situation with some decency and I will not get respect, I will stoop to your level and say that you and your pinko communist proletarian know-it-all friends should go to Russia and see what life is really like in a communist country. You guys think you know it all. I am a veteran of the U.S. military and I challenge you to find another country that is better than our own, and if you decide to go and you want to come back after (I give you guys five minutes) a week, I will not say I told you so, but I will make you apologize to Mr. Haig in person and become his personal servant for the remainder of your life.

I would take up your challenge Bob, but I stay in this country for one reason, and one reason only, and that is to burn up all your starch, stick-to-your-guns, status quo conservative slob. (I hope I don't hurt your feelings when I say this.) It has been a good war on paper and I hope to see you next year so I could get you even more pissed. Thank you for all your replies. It just adds fuel to the fire.

Frosh blues

Editor, The Bacon,

After 20 years as a freshman here at WPC, I'm sorry to see academic standards on the rise. It breaks my heart to think I might never get out. Not that I'm not fond of the students and the faculty, it's just that, well, I'm pushing 40 and I can't fool my wife and kids anymore! Day after day, after leaving the house pretending to be going to work, it's getting out of hand. Why can't the administration understand that 0.8 ain't such a bad GPA and let me off the hook. C'mon guys. How would you feel if you had to take writing effective prose 19 times?

The parking is perfect

Editor, The Bacon,

What's all this about parking problems. Of all the things wrong with this institution, parking is not one of them. In fact, parking is one of the few things right with this campus. I just don't get it. I come here at night to rape and pillage the fine women on this campus, and I never have a problem finding a spot. I read your fine paper every week, and every now and then, some jerk who thinks he can solve all the problems will write in. There are no problems. I just want to set the record straight and say I am pleased with the situation as it stands now.

What a concept!

An adjunct president for WPC

BY TANGERINE LaBOPPA

As the members of the Search Committee conduct the important work of selecting Seymour Hyman's successor, they should seriously consider filling the position of president of the college with an adjunct. The savings in salary alone more than justifies this proposal. Thousands of dollars over the years could be made available for far more deserving institutional needs.

1. A second clarion could be installed in Shea Center for the Performing Arts so that WPC could become the flagship state college for stereo bells.

2. Valet parking could be made available for late-arriving students, faculty and staff.

3. Five or six more sports information officers could be hired to better handle the numerous requests for stats on our nationally-renowned powerhouse teams.

4. Original architectural elements, fixtures and the like removed from Hobart Manor by WPC employees over the years could be repurchased for the restoration project.

5. Every person attending WPC, or working for WPC, or taking a shortcut through the campus on Mills Drive, could automatically receive a merit award of $4.19 every other semester.

6. Penmanship coaches could be hired for the evaluators who scribble on curriculum control sheets.

7. Simultaneous translators could be assigned to the classrooms of certain instructors.

8. A 24-hour college credit machine could be installed in the Student Center for students who wish to avoid the hassle and delay of sitting in classes all semester. This handy time-saver would allow students to purchase up to 12 credits of the total required for graduation.

9. We could fund a new multidisciplinary team-taught General Education course that would be offered in the Rec Fac. All students would be required to enroll at the same time, and all GE course professors would be assigned at least a cameo appearance. Instructors would receive .00894 overload credit.

10. We could fund the development of a test for the above mentioned course. This test, the General Education Required General Annual Test of Uniformly Acquired Knowledge, or GERGAN-TUAK, would consist of 23,659 questions and would require students to enter their answers on a tightly-rolled scantron scroll of perhaps some 1,000 sheets (single-ply).

Of course, the advantages of hiring an adjunct president are not limited to savings in the salary accounts. Adjuncting would permit WPC to institutionalize flexibility at the top.

Flexibility, known as the practice of firing talented untenured faculty, is touted by the current administration as highly desirable. If need be, we can hire a different adjunct president every semester. This would give untold numbers of women and minorities an opportunity to sit in the WPC oval office.

It would be especially advantageous to hire a new adjunct president for the beginning of each academic year. That way, changes in programs or procedures or even college structure made by various administrators over the summer when the ten-month staff is away would be as great a surprise to the college's president as they always are to the faculty.

Then, there's consistency to consider. Since no sane individual would expect to survive on only one adjunct position, WPC's adjunct president would undoubtedly try to land an adjunct presidency at, say, Montclair and Kean, too. Higher education in New Jersey could then experience a totally coordinated administration of the three largest state colleges north of the Raritan. Why, it might even lead to the establishment of a University of New Jersey. Do we dare suggest an adjunct university president? Would Rutgers give Ed Bloustein a half-time appointment and let him apply?

Come on, Search Committee, let's be creative. You know what they always say: "Nothing's cast in concrete."

Campus Views

Buxom Bertha Belching Banjo Queen

Well, I'll tell you. I would change the whole place. It doesn't make sense to have a college campus without a whorehouse. There are many students who need a sexual release and that is what I am here for—to give some "humming head." The campus would be turned into a place to lose all morals and warm people up for a lifetime of lasciviousness.

Ron Reagan President of the United States

I would fire the whole communist political science department, the Student Mobilization Committee and any other member of the campus community that does not conform to my standards of ridiculousness. I would erect a new monument to myself in the middle of Caldwell Plaza and make a new mandatory ritual in which students will come and give praise to me.

Kimberly Whitehead Never without a Mirror

I would make vast improvements on this campus. I know old Seymour well, and I don't want to put him down, but he didn't think about the students' vanity at all. I mean, there are no places on campus to fix yourself. I am just about perfect, but I always need the reassurance. I would put a high fashion boutique in the Student Center and invite mall rats from Willowbrook to come in and spend their money on something worthwhile.

Joe Yuppie Aspiring Ruler

My friend Ron summed it all up when he said that he would fire every non-conformist on campus however, I would take it one step further and exterminate them all. Who needs them? They don't serve any purpose. They breathe extra air. I would initiate a new dress code. It would consist of alligator shirts and khaki pants on Mondays and mix and match combinations on the other days. Everyone will have to have short haircuts similar to mine.

Sourmanski tries his hand again

BY IRVING SNODGRASS
In an attempt to overcome negative yellow journalistic reviews of his recent benefit for Eva's Soup Kitchen, involving a host of punk bands and some "touchy" fans, WPSC General Manager Al Sourmanski has planned a new benefit to take place sometime in the fall.

Wanting to avoid comparisons with such mega-charity raisers Band-Aid and USA For Africa, Sourmanski has coined "Help Us, We Need It" as the project's title. "Charity begins at home, man," said Sourmanski. "In this case, it's gonna end there, too. Look, no one hears this radio station except for the DJs and freshman girls hanging out at peer advisement near the TV monitor. Hopefully, the money will be healthy enough to bribe the FCC into finally giving us that FM license."

Beacon Arts Editor, Adam "Hack" Blutarsky, who wrote the recent controversial article about the first benefit, was very difficult to reach for comment, wearing disguises around campus in order to avoid over-excited punk sympathizers. Yet he was finally tracked down by Bacon reporters. The poor fellow was very nervous, indeed, sweating bullets, you know. When asked about his description of punks as "[garbage] from a torn hefty bag," Blutarsky managed to spit out, "Apparently these so-called punks who took offense to my article are really just God-awful dressers. Real punks know that the garbage (literally) they wear is a reflection of/reaction to the refuse dump of a society we live in. But I guess you can only expect so much from someone who publicly admits to wearing L.L. Bean" (an allusion to Sourmanski's recent decision to "come out of the closet," so to speak).

When asked about his alleged misquote of the WPSC general manager, Blutarsky said, "The quote was perfectly correct. I just got this brand new pencil and I've been practicing putting letters together on paper to make words, and then those into sentences. I think I've finally got the hang of it. Yet perhaps he had a wee bit reason to argue about the placement of his quote. Sounded great there at the end, though, didn't it?! The man's real psychotic — I love him!"
Sourmanski's new benefit should prove very exciting. Though the plans are still at an infant stage, some ideas that are being thrown around are:
1. Hiring the Sister Mary "Great Balls of Fire" Gospel Group (a group of ex-punks-turned-small-time-evangelists) to sing their 20-minute dance mix of the Ramones' "I Wanna Be Sedated."

- 2. Taking the entire group of performers on a cross-country tour of Nicaragua in the winter.
 - 3. Handing out free bottles of Thunderbird wine to the first 100 people at the door.
- WPC administrators are very pleased with the respect of another benefit on campus.

Seeme Gethighman stated, "I'm so ashamed I missed the last benefit. I was all set to do a few numbers myself, but Al told me there isn't much audience for middle-eastern chant music 'round these parts. At this next benefit, though, I'll get to wear my new penguin suit. Can't wait!"

Sourmanski in his earlier days.

We at The Bacon can't wait either.

We'll be partying in the desert

The Student Activities Programming Board (SAPB) has announced that next year's all-college picnic will be held in a section of the Garapata Desert.

Aunt
Fannie

The decision was passed unanimously by the Board during Thursday's meeting.

"We're tired of the same old song and dance," said President Ralph Sputum. "1984 was a real beat picnic because there was too much grass and fresh air. The picnic of 1985 was a little better because we had some dirty pavement in Lot 5 to work with.
Next year we hope to ship in a 20-acre plot of the Garapata Desert in an attempt to please the administration.

Students don't seem to mind the idea of partying in an arid sand pit. Joe Felch, a sophomore, said,
"Hey man, I don't care where they hold it as long as the kegs are flowin'."

Junior Betty Spleef said, "I can't wait to sink my toes in the sand and dive into a cold Bud."

SAPB Vice President Jane Phrigg said, "We don't even need a fence around the beer tent.
When's the last time you saw a cop in the desert?"

Dear

Uncle

Hymie

Dear Uncle Hymie,

Could you give me the lowdown on what is going on with Hobart Manor? Someone told me that the Executive Board of the Foundation has been holding late night seances on the top floor!! Is there any truth to this rumor?

Curious

Dear Curious,

All lies! None of those vicious rumors are true. Take them all with a grain of salt.

But since you asked, I will tell you what has been going on. Every Thursday night, me and my buddies sneak over there for a little illegal fun. In the basement we have a still. It produces some of the finest, sweetest, most potent moonshine you ever laid your lips on.

Then we move up up to the second floor where the hired go-go girls perform some of our wildest fantasies.

By the time we get up to the third floor, we're almost too tired to pull our wallets out and bet on the dog fights!

If we still have enough breath in our lungs, we climb up on the roof where we shoot pellet guns at passing cars.

Dear Uncle Hymie,

I've been having trouble picking up girls. Every time I go to a bar, I feel like I don't belong. The women aren't attracted to me and I always end up sitting alone. I'm five-foot-ten, 160 pounds and not bad looking. What can I do?

Lonely

Dear Lonely,

I once had the same problem, but I solved it by remembering a couple of easy steps.

As you walk into the nightclub, scan the horizon for horny babes. They are relatively easy to spot. They're the ones with their legs parted slightly. Occasionally, they will be holding a long, slender cigarette a few centimeters from their wet, puckered lips.

When you spot one, stare at her until she looks your way. When she does, quickly dart your tongue in and out of your mouth as if you were a frog.

If she puffs her cigarette and turns away, it means that she wants you. Now you know you've got it made!

Ramble up to the bar and order two Slam-Peckers. (Chicks really love 'em). Move back to your babe's table and sit yourself right down. If she tells you to get lost, it simply means that she is playing hard to get. A few well placed tweaks will have her sitting in your lap.

When the bar closes, take her to a cheap and tawdry motel. The rest is up to you...

Dear Uncle Hymie,

What's the deal? The students I live with in Heritage Hall are appalled by the callousness with which the administration has been treating the student body at large.

First, you have a bunch of half-assed loudmouths walk all over our roof, throwing tiles through windows and shouting obscenities at us. Who do these guys answer to?

Then you dig up the whole front of the Student Center just as soon as the weather gets nice. I don't have to tell you that it looks like hell.

Next, you have our supposed "Springfest" picnic held in a parking lot. I guess you couldn't care less since you're not a student.

To top it all off, you raise the cost of on-campus housing. Boy, is that a slap in the face!

Tell me what is more important to you, the health and morale of your students, or the image you present to capitalist bourgeoisie swine?

Disillusioned

Dear Disillusioned,

I thank you for your meritorious letter. As you well know, it is the duty of any administration to organize the elements it oversees. In this day and age, many organizations find it more profitable to run themselves in a business-like manner. At WPC, we have opted to jump on this bandwagon.

As with any other business, someone must be exploited. It just so happens that the students are the ones who must lose out. I'm sorry, but there is no other way. Besides ... I'm leaving!

Three easy steps

It's so easy to turn Pete Spiridon into Richard Nixon, you won't believe it. First you must find a suitable photograph, such as this one.

Then sketch in the ski-jump nose. (Don't forget to accent the billowing jowls.) Beady eyes will add that sneaky Nixon aura. Bring the hairline down a bit.

Voila, the trick, she is done. After you clean up the rough edges, your transformation will be complete. Simply amazing!

spend on checking,
the less you'll have

When you're starting out in New York, you can't live without a checking account. But it hasn't been easy to find a checking account you can live with, either. Banks can tie up most of your money with hefty minimum balances, then whittle away at the rest with considerable monthly charges.

But Manufacturers Hanover Trust's new Basic CheckingSM is changing all that.

It's everything you ever wanted in a checking account, for less.

There's no minimum opening deposit. No minimum balance. And no charge on the first eight checks you write each month.* You get unlimited free use of all Manufacturers Hanover automatic teller machines, with access to the NYCESM and CIRRU^S systems. That means you can use over 800 cash machines at banks all over the New York area, and thousands more across the country.

To open your Manufacturers Hanover Basic Checking account, call 1-800-645-6400.

We'll even help you close your old account and make a smooth transition.

If you live in New York, you can't avoid writing checks and spending lots of money. But now, at least, you won't have to spend lots of money writing checks.

In an effort to bolster sagging attendance and arouse excitement to the sports program, the women's sport department will forego the use of balls and replace them with human heads.

The heads will be supplied by the science department, which last year had to throw hundreds of unused ones away. The "Head" of the Science department, Sam Cell, said, "We just decided to pool our resources to help both programs, it was as simple as putting our two heads together. Women's sports will now be even bigger than midget wrestling."

The sports that will utilize the heads are the baskethead team (the head will be filled with a rubber core, making it easy to bounce and, with the hair, will be easy to palm), the field headhockey team (heads are shaved of all hair), the headtennis team (the heads are shrunken-down to induce true bounces and overhead smashes are still permitted) and the softhead team (where the players will use a rubber bat to preserve the heads).

Sandy to stay

BY DON SPAGHETTIO

Tom "Sandy" Peacock can now officially call William Paterson College home. Sandy, who has been stuck in the long-jump sand pit since 1971 has been declared a permanent school monument.

Sandy, who draws crowds of onlookers and tourists from hundreds of nations, died suddenly in 1975 when he had an allergic reaction to his four year old jockey shorts.

WPC decided because of the enormous curiosity and appeal that Sandy would remain in his fixed position and the school would charge tourists admission.

Sandy has brought the school the publicity and notoriety it has yearned for. "Finally, the sports department has something to offer the athlete and the community," said Jacque Hed. Hed, the department's leader and spokesman, added, "He gives our athletes new hope that they too can turn one giant step for athletics into one small step for mankind."

Initially, many groups banned the action of having Peabody stay in the pit calling it inhumane. But Peabody could not leave.

Peabody, who was in shock and could not speak, was never able to comment on his condition. His family worked out a financial agreement with the school collecting a major percentage of the take from the tourists and souvenirs. The family released an official statement saying that Peabody was happy to help out the family in any way he could and would stay in the pit.

The family has made approximately $23.5 million off Sandy and is currently considering buying Jamaica. Royalties are still coming in from the comedy sitcom, cartoons and Sandy dolls. The dolls have outsold G.I. Joe, Ken and Mr. T dolls by the millions. Only Ken would agree to be made bending down in that position.

Besides the athletic department, one group who was elated by the school's decision to keep Sandy was the gay community. The group entitled "Gays for Sandy" helps maintain and care for the athlete. The duties include changing his clothes, washing his body and raking the sand. "Sandy has shown us how we can all come together, to be united in the same cause; human rights," said spokesperson Deniss Mayflower.

Women in Sports

The interest in women's sports should greatly increase with major television networks such as ESHN (Entertainment, Sports and Heads Network) looking to televise all the events.

"We've been looking for something to set us apart from men's sports, and I think we've found it," said the basketball coach Jane Labotomee, adding, "If people don't come out to watch us now, they probably have a 'chip on their shoulders.'"

Keeping your "head" in the game will take on a totally different meaning for women's sports. The field hockey team starts the exhibition season on May 25 in the first test of the "head games."

P.S. Sam Cell assures us that the rumors that students have been missing from biology and anatomy classes have been grossly exaggerated.

Which is a nice way to make a living, because it keeps a man busy, and requires no thought at all. The two keys to success as a sportswriter are: (1) a blind willingness to believe anything you're told by the coaches, hustlers and other 'official spokesmen' for the team-owners who provide the free booze ... and (2) a Roget's Thesaurus, in order to avoid using the same verbs and adjectives twice in the same paragraph."

"Grudge" match finally settled

Snack puts Semore to sleep

BY ANTOINE G'DINSKI

They have traded verbal jabs all year long with neither man holding any advantage. So, it was only fitting that they settle their differences in the ring. The match was set, a Texas Death match enclosed in a cage with no holds barred in the Rec Center last weekend. Sergeant Semore Hightower would finally meet "Gorgeous" Ervin Snack in the biggest "grudge" match of the year.

Semore started his training for the match with a body building routine which included swimming with 200 pounds strapped around his neck. "I will crush Snack like a grape. His mouth has been blowing hot air all year, it's time to smash that pencil neck geek. I will use my European claw grip to bust his head like a walnut," said Sgt. Semore.

Well, the long awaited match finally started with Hightower taking command. A series of elbows and knees to the head had Ervin reeling and on the verge of unconsciousness. Hightower was in a state of ecstasy, beating on a defenseless Snack. Hightower's body was shaking with excitement. He was just about to apply his deathly claw grip when Snack pulled out something out of his trunks.

To any other wrestler, a "foreign object" would have been a knife, chair or brick. But to the "Gorgeous" one, it was a small paperback book entitled "How to Make Love to a Single Man."

As Hightower's death grip was inches away from Snack's head, Ervin began to read. As he went from chapter to chapter, he slowly forced Hightower into a deep comatose state, virtually paralyzing Hightower to the mat in a missionary position. "It was better than any sleeper hold or any stupid claw grip," said a jubilant Snack, adding, "The secret was to read slowly, especially the parts about making love to your favorite muscle parts. And on top of all this, I didn't even get my hair messed up. How exciting!"

"Gorgeous" Snack is certain that Hightower will remain unconscious for the next school year. "I think we've put Hightower in his rightful place, although many people think there will be no noticeable difference from what happened this year. If he gets out of line, just remember to take out your copy of 'How to Make Love to a Single Man' and Hightower will be history," said Snack. Stay tuned; a rematch is in the making.

Semore on the ropes

"Gorgeous" Ervin Snack puts an arm lock on Sargeant Semore Hightower in the opening minutes of their "grudge" match at the Rec Center. Left: Semore dives off the ropes as Snack lies in a semi-conscious state.
