

Haledon's favorite son returns to speak at WPC graduation

By Matthew Halpern

be good wrestlers, but how to be good individuals prepared to go into society."

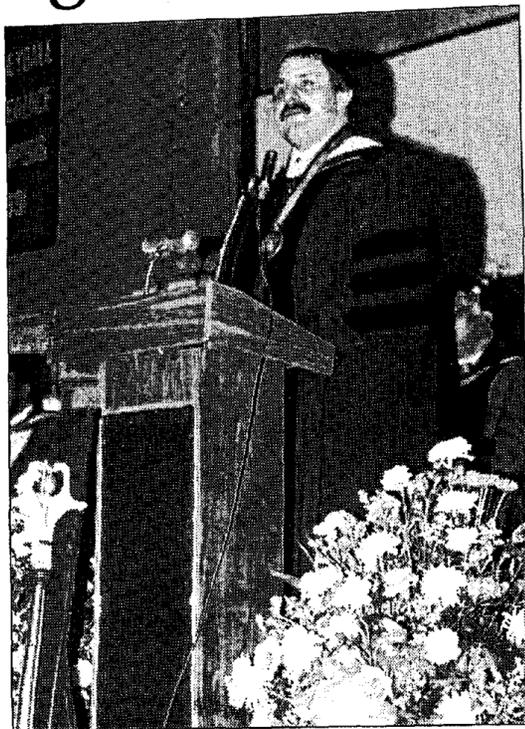

Baumgartner comes from a long tradition of native Haledonians. Both his father's family and his grandparents' families hale from this area.

"Haledon was a great place to grow up and it still looks like a nice place to live," said Baumgartner. "Having the college here is a real asset, with the open atmosphere to the north making it a comfortable place to live." From these modest roots Baumgartner sees himself as no different than any other person. None of the championships hide the fact that Bruce Baumgartner is a regular man, who has used his talent and abilities to his advantage.

Currently, Baumgartner is coaching at Edinboro University in Pennsylvania, a division one school that is ranked seventh in the nation with Baumgartner at the helm. As well as teaching his athletes to be good wrestlers, Baumgartner hopes to make them better people.

"I enjoy coaching and am so happy at Edinboro," said Baumgartner. "Hopefully, I can teach these athletes not only to

After spending the first 18 years of his life in Haledon, Baumgartner has since relocated

Sylvana Meneses/The Beacon

The Haledon native, Baumgartner — a four time Olympic medal winner — stress the importance of setting goals in his speech to William Paterson College graduates.

to Western Pennsylvania. He currently resides there with his wife Linda and their three sons, Bryan, Dylan, and Zachary.

Baumgartner earned his education through the Haledon school system and at the same time developed a love and skill for wrestling in high school. He then went to Indiana State University earning his bachelors degree in education and his masters degree in education from

see FUTURE page 16

the Beacon

A NEWSPAPER THAT'S CLEARLY FOR YOU

Yoni D. Greenbaum
Editor in Chief

Matthew Halpern
News Editor

Joe Giglio
Tim Bornemann
Insider Editor

Dan McDonough, Jr.
Editorial Page Editor

John F. Gillick
Gena Zak
Editor at Large

Sylvana Meneses
Photo Editor

Tracy Bodoff
Copy Editor

Mike Garrison
Proofreader

Scott Carlson
Norman DeFilippo
Ed Erlenmeyer
Michele Mielko
Dave Roe
Jamie Westervelt
Mona Zughbi
Staff Writers

Dana Romatowski
Staff Photographers

Melissa Storms
Designer

Danielle Gabriel
Advertising Director

George Robb
Academic Advisor

The Beacon is published on Monday and serves Haledon, North Haledon, Wayne and the William Paterson College Campus Community. Business/Editorial offices are located on the campus of William Paterson College in the Student Center, Room 310, Wayne, NJ 07470 - 201-595-2248. The Beacon receives no money from WPC or its student body and therefore relies solely on advertising revenue to operate.

Winter graduation goes off without a flake in sight

By Norman DeFlippo, Yoni Greenbaum and Michele Mielko

Although the temperature was low enough to freeze any water already on the ground — making driving and walking treacherous — thankfully, exclaimed, members of the William Paterson College Graduation committee, there was no snow.

The mid-year commencement, the college's second such, was held on Jan. 19 in the college's Recreation Center. As opposed to last year, when a blizzard blanketed New Jersey, no snow was expected.

Over 3,000 people filled the stands to watch the awarding of 649 bachelor's degrees and 84 master's degrees.

As the graduates walked in, to the tune of "Pomp and Circumstance," family and friends cheered and tried to get photographs. Siblings sat atop of parents' shoulders vying for a better view of their sisters or brothers.

Many of the graduates had written messages atop of their caps thanking their parents or friends.

"It took 11 years of night classes," read one such message.

Members of one sorority unfurled a banner that read "Good Luck Christine."

The ceremony marked the culmination of years of study and hard work -- a message that was to be reiterated by all of the graduation speakers.

WPC students who completed their requirements for graduation between August and December 1996 are allowed to participate.

According to Pamela Fushko, director of telecommunication at WPC "the winter ceremony is about half the size of the May graduation ceremony, with roughly 450 graduating in the winter and between 800 and 900 people following the spring semester;

Fushko who organizes the event explained that "this commencement is usually a little more calmer, mainly because it is conducted indoors, as opposed to the outdoor setting for the May graduation."

Her sentiments were echoed by many of the graduates who said that they preferred the winter graduation because of its intimate nature.

The day started at noon with a faculty and staff luncheon held in the Student Center Ballroom. According to Ed Marsh, a WPC senior and member of the graduation committee, a letter was sent to all faculty from the senior class and the office of the president urging faculty to attend.

"It is very good to see so many faculty and staff and parents come out to honor [the graduating students] achievements," said WPC Provost and Executive Vice President, Chernoh M. Sesay.

At approximately 2 p.m., dressed in their robes, the graduates, entered the recreation center and were led by Doris White, senior faculty member and professor of curriculum and college marshal.

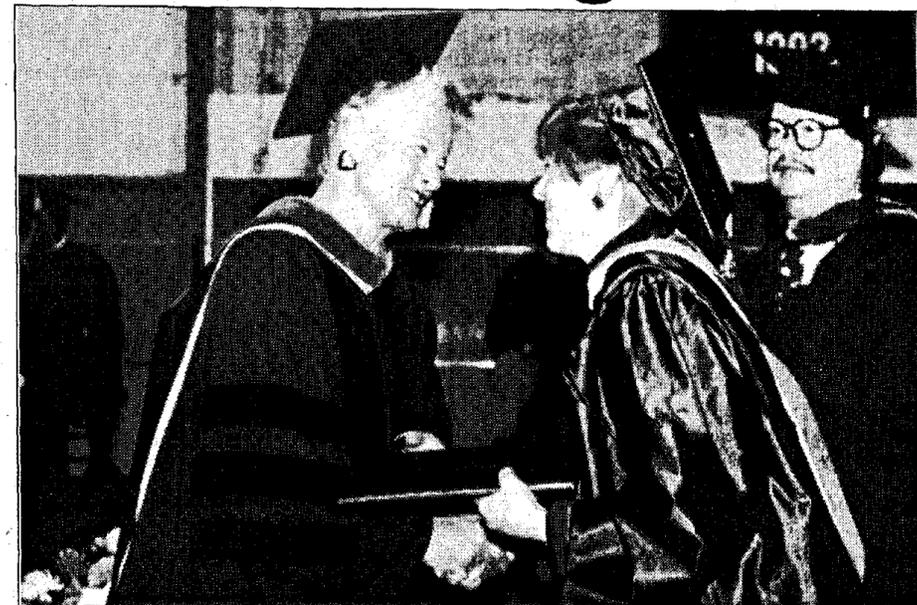

First to address the graduates was Senior Class President Anne Li. Although not graduating until May, the Warren resident recognized those members of the graduating class who had to work or raise families.

She urged the graduates to be proud of their achievements.

"Be proud as well, because you, have helped make William Paterson College the vital and flexible institution it is today," Li said.

Li explained her own "approach to growing" in the hope of inspiring her fellow classmates. She explained how she captures ideas and puts them down on paper. How she reflects often on her goals so as to remain committed to achieving these goals.

"This process makes me feel armed with the social, intellectual, personal capacity needed to succeed in the real world outside these campus gates."

Interim Dean of the William Paterson College School of Education, Susan Kuvec, (above) congratulates one of the graduates. (left) WPC Provost and Executive Vice President Chernoh M. Sesay presents the graduates for the conferring of degrees.

Sylvana Meneses/The Beacon

Li was followed by WPC President, Arnold Speert. Before speaking to the graduates, Speert recognized those members of the WPC faculty who retired this past semester and those who had recently earned Emeritus status.

He explained how the mid-semester graduation and the reading of graduates names were both the result of students suggestions.

"We have adapted this celebration to become more significant to the celebrants," he said.

Speert went on to "reflect" on graduation. He explained how each aspect of the ceremony plays a certain role.

"The remarks made our very last chance to attempt to influence you before you commence your lives after WPC," he said.

Speert closed by urging that the students see the event as individual achievements, "this ceremony is the means by which we say directly to each of you: 'good job; well done!' and wish you the best for the future."

The featured speaker and recipient of the Presidential Medal, was then introduced by Fred Gruel, chair of the WPC Board of Trustees.

The Presidential Medal is given to a member of the community for outstanding service to the college, community or society at large.

Bruce Baumgartner, who was chosen to carry the American flag for the 1996 games opening ceremonies has won two gold medals, one silver and one bronze, he is the first American wrestler to earn medals in three consecutive Olympics and only the sixth athlete in United States history to do so in four different olympics.

According to Gruel, Baumgartner was chosen "In recognition of his remarkable athletic achievements, noteworthy academic status, dynamic perseverance, and consequent stature as an inspiration for all who strive to succeed."

In accepting his medal, Baumgartner talked about growing up in and around WPC, as his mother worked at the college.

"Not long ago I was sitting in a chair at a graduation like this one," he said.

He went on to outline four areas or the "four keys to success" that graduates should focus on in order to be successful.

They included setting high goals, surrounding oneself with good people and taking care of ones body.

"Your mind and body will accomplish great things if you let it," he said.

| | |
|--|----------------|
| JANUARY 21, 1997 | Vol. 61 No. 19 |
| <h1>Contents</h1> | |
| Haledon's favorite son returns to speak at WPC graduation | Page 2 |
| Winter graduation goes off without a flake in sight | Page 3 |
| New residence halls to help meet needs of WPC students | Page 4 |
| Student Government Association attempts to provide more weekend activities at WPC | Page 5 |
| They Might Be Giants: The Ike Turners of Rock & Roll | Page 7 |
| Under the Microscope | Page 7 |
| ON THE COVER - Three members of the Class of 1996 celebrate their achievements following graduation in the Recreation Center this past Sunday. | |
| At the movies | Page 9 |
| On Stage | Page 12 |
| Classifieds/Horoscopes | Page 14 |
| WPC students offered option to high-priced books | Page 15 |
| Views of the News | Page 19 |
| Opinions & Review | Page 18 |
| Memories of graduation | Pages 10-11 |

Sylvana Meneses/The Beacon