Weather History

Dec. 15, 1945 - A record December snowstorm hit Buffalo, N.Y. Unofficial totals from the storm just south of the city recorded 70 inches, while the official total was 36.6 inches in the city. Needless to say, travel was crippled for the city and most of New York state.

Natl Weather Summary

A strong cold front will move into the Ohio River Valley states and the Northeast by the middle of the week, bringing heavy rainfall. More rain is in across the Gulf Coast states with a tropical disturbance. The West is fairly tranquil until mid of the week, when a new system begins develop. Temperatures will remain seasonable the majority of the country.

For Gore, it's likely the last stand

Dec. 10 — Nine justices, three lawyers, 90 minutes. A hearing Monday before the U.S. Supreme Court is effectively Al Gore's last chance to win a Florida recount — and the presidency. If the court sides with George W. Bush, Gore's bid for the presidency is all but over. If it sides with Gore, the Democrat could push forward and claim he won Florida, and thus the Oval Office.

THE LEGAL ISSUE to be argued Monday at 11 a.m. ET is what to do about the 43,000 so-called under-votes — ballots in which voting machines read no selection for president. Like the nation at large, the courts have also been divided.

If the U.S. Supreme Court sides with Bush and chooses to overrule the Florida high court's Friday ruling, it will effectively mark the end of the Florida recount fight. If the justices allow the Florida ruling to stand, Gore may be able to get a final accounting on disputed Florida counties and thus make the case that he won the state's pivotal 25 electoral votes.

Bush's lawyers insist that the recount Gore needs quite simply goes against the way the electoral system is set up.

"The issue is, is the system appropriate and proper and constitutional? Or does it represent a change in the law after the game has been played?" James Baker, Bush's point man, said Sunday.

Indeed, if the justices rule in Bush's favor, Gore's lead attorney, David Boies, said on NBC's "Meet the Press," that would represent "the end of it.... Their voice is final. They have the power to decide this."

Monday's showdown in Washington underscores just how compressed the timeline in the election fight has become. It's not clear when or if the Supreme Court will make a decision about the fate of the Florida recount, but the first in a series of deadlines comes just one day later: Federal law grants the Florida Legislature power to choose a slate of electors if no result is reached by midnight Tuesday, and lawmakers are almost certain to pick a slate loyal to Bush.

Because the actual voting by electors doesn't occur until Dec. 18, they could be chosen after that point, but their validity could be challenged in Congress.

Indeed, the only recourse left for Gore should he lose in the U.S. high court would be to seek legal closure on the few issues unresolved by the Florida court system. Boies declined to predict whether the vice president might delay a concession until another case seeking to throw out Florida absentee ballots works its way through appeal.

"I'm not going to say what's going to happen in terms of pending Florida Supreme Court appeals," Boies said.

Even if Gore wins the case, the high court would need to restart the recount process and have it completed within a half-day — or else any Gore claim to victory would likely remain open to challenge.

In presenting their cases Sunday to the Supreme Court, both sides relied heavily on core arguments they have repeatedly used in both state and federal courts. The Bush team maintains that the Florida court is meddling in affairs it has no power to decide — and thus violated both the U.S. Constitution and federal law. Gore's team believes that the current Florida vote tally is simply inaccurate and that the only way to keep from "tainting" the electoral result is to allow the recount.

DEFINING A VOTE

The difference between the two arguments underscores the core split in strategy between the two men: Bush seeks legitimacy in the official Florida vote tallies that give him a slim win, while Gore hopes to portray those official results as fundamentally flawed.

Earlier Sunday, Baker said on "Meet the Press" that "we're not afraid to let every vote be counted."

Watch the latest NBC and MSNBC reports on the Florida presidential dispute.

"The issue is, what is every legal vote?" Baker added, echoing the opinion of U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, who sided with the majority in Saturday's 5-4 decision to suspend the recount pending Bush's appeal.

END OF THE LINE?

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., said Sunday he expected that Gore would concede under that scenario. "I believe he will" concede if he loses in the Supreme Court, Gephardt said on ABC, adding that Bush should do the same if the tables are turned. "We should all follow the rule of law, and I'm positive the vice president will do that, and I think George Bush will do that," Gephardt spokeswoman Laura Nichols later said he wasn't trying to pressure Gore.

Boies will be representing the Gore camp in the case, formally docketed as Bush v. Gore. It was earlier expected that Laurence Tribe, who argued before the court in a related appeal last week, would be arguing the new case. A Gore team lawyer said Boies would argue the case because he's worked more closely than Tribe on the Florida recounts.

Arguing for Bush will be Ted Olson. Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris has joined Bush's appeal, and the justices granted her request Sunday that her lawyer be allowed to argue before the court as well. Her lawyer will get 10 minutes of the 45 minutes allotted to the Bush team.

As it did last week when it heard arguments in the related Bush appeal, the court will distribute an audiotape of the hearing immediately afterward to broadcasters. MSNBC Cable and MSNBC.com will provide the audio as soon as it is available Monday. The U.S. television networks, except Fox, have also petitioned the court to provide live video broadcasts.

The court has also received records from the Florida recount cases. Early Sunday, it was reported that the Florida Supreme Court was shipping about 12,000 ballots from Miami-Dade and Palm Beach counties to the U.S. Supreme Court as evidence. But a Florida high court spokesman said Sunday afternoon that was incorrect and that the U.S. Supreme Court had only asked for, and was sent, case records.

Saturday's U.S. Supreme Court ruling capped a breathless day of Gore.

Finally, in the space of less than five minutes, a federal appeals court rejected Bush's demand to stop the recount, only to be trumped by the nation's highest court.

JUSTICES VOICE DIFFERENCES

The U.S. Supreme Court's order accepting Bush's appeal was unsigned, but the dissent was not. It revealed that Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Justices Scalia, Anthony Kennedy, Clarence Thomas and Sandra Day O'Connor voted to halt the counts.

Justices John Paul Stevens, Stephen Breyer, Ruth Bader

Ginsburg and David Souter disagreed in uncharacteristically sharp tones. Stevens wrote that the decision was "unwise" because "to stop the counting of legal votes, the majority today departs from" the rules of judicial restraint.

The Florida Supreme Court's ruling Friday had ended a string of legal setbacks for Gore. The 4-3 decision overruled a lower court and ordered a manual recount of disputed ballots in 64 Florida counties.

The Florida court also ordered state officials to include votes from two counties, effectively cutting Bush's lead in Florida to just 154 votes.

Waiting in the wings was the Republican-dominated Florida Legislature, which met Friday on the first day of a special session in which it could select a slate of electors supporting Bush, whatever the courts rule. Both houses scheduled committee hearings for Monday.

ARGUMENTS IN DETAIL

Billiard Clubs wraps up semester

By Janice Davidson
WPU Billiard Club

The WPU Billiard Club started in Spring 2000 with small numbers and has mushroomed to as many as 70 active members during the Fall 2000 semester. On any given Tuesday or Thursday between 11 A.M. - 2 P.M. anyone can come observe and/or participate in the WPU Billiard Club.

A WPU Billiard Team was formed with 12 regulars competing weekly in the newly formed Metro Inter-Collegiate Billiard League (MIBL). Other teams include New Jersey Institute Technology, Passaic County Community College, Montclair State University, and Essex County College. WPU finished in 2nd place behind NJIT, who then defeated Penn State in a special challenge match at the end of the season. NJIT will go on to Texas in March 2001 for the National Team Championship. Next year it could be WPU as co-captains Arnel Fabian and Janice Davidson are grooming a host of student pool players.

Arnel was selected MVP of the MIBL and will be graduating. Janice will be back to lead the team and also represent WPU in the ACUI regionals in February, 2001. Last Spring Janice went all the way to the National Championship and of (* Maybe we could put the best sixteen players, or sweet 16*) 16 in North Dakota.

There also were some special events held during the semester. Assistant Activity Director Don Phelps hosted the annual individual ACUI Billiard Championships for William Paterson University. There were 4 male winners and 2 female winners who will go on to NJIT and New York Rutgers campuses to play in the tri-state regionals on February 16 and 17, 2001. WPU Professor and Academic Advisor to the Professional Billiard Player Steve Lillis did famous trick shot show as a guest of WPU Christian Fellowship. Professor L as time permits does shows on college campuses all over the USA.

Then in November did Famous Trick Shot Artist Tom "Dr. C" Rossman and his wife and sidekick Marty's Cue" Rossman came to town to do the amazing and hilarious billiard show. A retion in his honor followed as many students enjoyed meeting (speaking to) Dr. Cue Ms. Cue up close and sonal while enjoying the delicious food prepared by our WPU staff.

Stay tuned as we plan on having a late night billiard bonanza during "Winterfest Week" (January 22-26, 2001) here at WPU with 5 tournaments running side by side with prizes for all. Tentative date is 10 P.M. to 2 A.M. on Thursday 1/25/01. (*All are Welcome) Plan to attend. We are also looking for some players to join the billiard team. Contact Janice Davidson at 720- 4172 or email at davidsonj@student.wpunj.edu.

Dr. "Cue" Rossman, a world-famous trick shot artist, shared pool tricks with William Paterson University students in the Student Center arcade.

The Florida court's action conflicts with Florida state law and the state Legislature and thus violates federal requirements that only a state legislature may set the process of choosing presidential electors. The Florida justices' action "created a regime virtually guaranteed to incite controversy, suspicion and lack of confidence," wrote Bush's lawyers, who also insisted that the court violated federal law by trying to set rules for resolving election disputes after Election Day.

The Florida court's method for recounting votes was "arbitrary, standardless and subjective," they argued. Among the Bush team's examples: The court took pains to ensure that the undervotes would be counted but took no action on the validity of "overvotes" — ballots on which more than one candidate's name was punched.

When Florida Circuit Judge Terry Lewis set guidelines late Friday for a quick, final recount, it was the "unconstitutional fruit" of the Florida Supreme Court's ruling. Therefore, the circuit court was acting based on a flawed decision, Bush's lawyers argued.

Bush's team also chastised the Florida court for issuing Friday's ruling without any mention of the U.S. high court's last ruling on the election, which specifically struck down a previous Florida ruling — essentially making a case that the Florida justices had ignored the federal justices. Advertisement The Presidential Election and Other

Gore's lawyers countered in their briefs that "voters have important rights to have their ballots counted, and the magnitude of those rights dwarfs any due process claim [Bush and others assert here]."

"The Florida Supreme Court's order does nothing more than place the voters whose votes were not tabulated by the machine on the same footing as those whose votes were so tabulated. In the end, all voters are treated equally, ballots that reflect their intent are counted," Gore's attorneys said.

Other Gore arguments:

Under the same federal law used by Bush's side, the Florida high court was within its rights to rule as it did because the law allows for "judicial determination" of election disputes; the Florida Supreme Court was simply clarifying "the meaning of state law" in its actions, not changing the meaning of the law, and the court's action were "consistent with state law."

Although the Florida Legislature can turn to a state circuit court to resolve election disputes, as the Bush team argued, the Gore lawyers claimed there would be a default role for "judicial review" in that process; Bush team claimed only that a circuit court would have the right to weigh in.

If the U.S. justices were to overturn the state decision, Gore lawyers argued, they would "run an impermissible risk of tainting the result of the election in Florida — and thereby the nation."

Beleaguered Barak seeks early poll

JERUSALEM, Dec. 10— In an all-or-nothing political gamble, Prime Minister Ehud Barak formally handed in his resignation Sunday to Israel's president, a move that plunges the country into a wide-open election campaign at a time when violence with the Palestinians is also raging.

DESPITE THE resignation and his sharply declining popularity, Barak will remain in office heading a caretaker government, and plans to seek re-election in a special ballot for the prime minister's post, expected in early February.

NBC's Dana Lewis reported from Tel Aviv that Barak's decision to quit was seen as a tactical move designed to block his leading rival, former Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, from running for the prime minister's post. Recent opinion polls show Netanyahu easily defeating Barak if an election were held soon.

After explaining his decision to the Cabinet, Barak gave his letter of resignation to President Moshe Katsev in the afternoon, and it takes effect after 48 hours.

"In order to receive a new mandate from the nation for the way in which I lead ... I decided to submit my resignation," Barak said in a brief appearance with Katsev. AdvertisementThe Presidential Election and Other Barak's resignation forces the election for prime minister, but not for parliament. Under these circumstances, only sitting members of parliament can run for the prime minister's post. Netanyahu is not a member of the legislature, and therefore is barred from being a candidate.

But Netanyahu on Sunday nonetheless declared his candidacy and urged parliament to complete legislation that would ensure he could run for the office.

ELECTION WON'T BE EASY

Barak, who won a landslide victory over Netanyahu just 18 months ago, still faces an uphill battle for re-election. Many Israelis have grown disillusioned with his leadership amid the violence that has derailed peace negotiations with the Palestinians and left more than 300 dead since September.

NBC's Lewis reported that Barak was expected to make a major push to reach some sort of agreement with the Palestinians before an election in order to woo Israeli voters. But with only 60 days and his political survival at stake, few believed that a comprehensive pact could be reached with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Arafat said on Sunday he saw little hope of progress on the peace front during Israel's election campaign.

"Peace talks will stop until the elections are over," Arafat said upon his return to the Gaza Strip from Egypt. He also accused Barak of not implementing agreements already reached. "Barak is famous for not implementing what he's signed and wasting time," Arafat said.

SURPRISE ANNOUNCEMENT

Barak caught most everyone in Israel by surprise in a televised speech Saturday night when he announced he would be quitting and that elections would be held in just two months.

Meanwhile, Israeli politicians and analysts immediately began debating the possibility of amending the election law to allow Netanyahu, or anyone else not in parliament, to run for prime minister.

Barak said he would support such a proposal, but it was not clear whether the change could be passed in the short time before the planned ballot.

"It will be impossible to change the law in time for 'citizen Netanyahu' to run. So (Barak's) move will succeed," said political analyst Hanan Crystal.

The main opposition party, Likud, said Barak's move was a transparent ploy to block Netanyahu, but said they would try to find a way that would allow Netanyahu to run.

"To do all this in order to avoid a direct challenge from someone who is known to have high ratings in the polls is such a dishonorable parliament, the Knesset, he would probably find it just as difficult to govern and gain support for the peace process.

A poll published Friday in the Maariv newspaper showed Netanyahu ahead of Barak by 45 to 27 percent. The poll of 1,300 Israelis had a 3.5 percentage point margin of error.

RIGHT-WING BACKS NETANYAHU

Meanwhile, Likud leader Ariel Sharon said he would welcome a change in the election laws that would allow Netanyahu to run, though that would almost certainly work against his own ambition to become prime minister.

"My opinion is that we need to allow every citizen, even if he is not a Knesset member, to run in the elections for prime minister," Sharon said Sunday.

If Netanyahu could run, he would likely be Likud's candidate, rather than Sharon.

Polls have shown Sharon and Barak running neck-and-neck.

BACKGROUND OF VIOLENCE

Israel's political maneuvers took place against a background of continued violence between Israeli troops and Palestinian militants. Israeli soldiers shot and killed a Palestinian man who was trying to place a roadside bomb near a Jewish settlement just south of Jerusalem, army officials said Sunday.

A second Palestinian man fled the scene near Har Gilo, an army spokesman said on condition of anonymity. In a separate incident, the army located and defused a bomb near the Jewish settlement of Elon More near Nablus in the West Bank, army radio reported.

Israel's army chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Shaul Mofaz, told a Cabinet meeting Sunday that he believed Palestinian militants were planning more bomb attacks.

A Palestinian boy launches a stone at Israeli troops with a slingshot during clashes in the refugee camp of Rafah in the Gaza Strip on Sunday.

In recent weeks, clashes between stone-throwing Palestinian youths and Israeli troops have declined. However, Palestinians have exploded several roadside bombs and gunmen have increasingly targeted Israeli cars traveling on roads of the West Bank.

Public relations then and now

AUSTIN, Texas — For a fascinating look at public relations then and now, I recommend comparison of two apparently disparate but superb pieces of work. The first is an astonishing book about a long-past and almost-forgotten agony, "King Leopold's Ghost" by Adam Hochschild, concerning the Holocaust-like destruction of the natives of the Congo between 1890 and 1910 by a hideous system of slave labor. Best estimates are that between 5 million and 10 million people died — murdered, starved or worked to death — when the entire Congo River basin was the solely owned plantation of one man, King Leopold II of Belgium.

The second piece, in an issue of Brill's Content, is "Making Bill," an examination of the public relations machine that made Bill Gates the head of an entirely different kind of empire. Not that I am in any way comparing Gates to the ruthless and unscrupulous Leopold — the connection lies in the use of public relations. Not only did Leopold use PR in an astonishingly modern way, but the man who almost single-handedly brought an end to the horror in the Congo also used public relations to undermine the king. It's an amazing story.

Most of us who read Joseph Conrad's "Heart of Darkness" remember Mr. Kurtz's last words: "The horror, the horror." The book is now taught as a symbolic work about evil. Actually, it's more like journalism — the horror was just as real as the policy of chopping off the hands of natives who did not meet their ivory or rubber quotas. With no exaggeration, Conrad called it "the vilest scramble for loot that ever disfigured the history of human conscience." Conrad was a friend and ally of E.D. Morel, the British journalist and reformer who crusaded against Leopold for 20 years. Morel's other great ally was Sir Roger Casement, the Irish patriot who was later hanged as a traitor by the British who had knighted him. A most extraordinary tale.

Leopold went about first stealing an enormous chunk of an entire continent and then exploiting its people — in a way so inhumane that it makes one gasp — by some eerily familiar methods. Posing as an anti-slavery crusader (!), he carefully planted and nurtured the notion that enlightened Europeans must step in to help (!) the Congolese, who were being enslaved by Arab traders. He then hired lobbyists and paid off journalists to get first the United States and then Britain and Germany to recognize his claim to the Congo River and all the "unoccupied" lands thereof.

Leopold was shrewd enough to put the explorer and journalist Henry Morton Stanley, of "Dr. Livingstone, I presume" fame, on his payroll. He bought influence on three continents, not only through the tried-and-true method of cutting government officials in on his obscene profits but also by controlling the press.

There really is a comical similarity between Leopold's careful wooing of journalists — he often brought parties of them to his palace and was a master at flattering and steering them — and Bill Gates' methods. According to Content, Gates likewise annually invites a dozen or so journalists who cover him regularly to stay with him for a few days at his vacation home in Washington, flying them in by seaplane. "The off-the-record retreat offers the favored reporters intimate, prolonged exposure to Gates and his ideas," Content reports.

The parallels continue: Gates and Microsoft have an estimated 500 public relations people working for them, and Gates, too, has put journalists on his payroll. And like Leopold, as coverage of his empire has become more critical, Gates has fought back, although Content regards his counteroffensive as counterproductive. In the bloody and tragic tale of the Congo, at least there is a hero: Morel, who used public relations for a noble purpose, running what Hochschild says was the first international campaign for human rights. (Obligatory disclaimer: I have known Hochschild slightly for many years.) Morel's greatest weapon was the truth; he not only documented the system of holding the women of a village as hostages until the men filled their rubber quota, but he also kept careful track of the billions of dollars that Leopold took out of the Congo, sending back only more guns with which to kill the people.

Morel also worked by influencing what we now call "the elites." Mark Twain, himself a brilliant campaigner for human rights in the United States, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle in England worked with him.

Morel organized local branches of his Congo Reform Association in Europe and America, persuaded bishops and members of Parliament to appear at his mass rallies (what we would call "using celebrities" for a cause), and tailored his message for different audiences. In another move now used by Gates, Morel used slides at his public lectures; those of maimed natives, sent by missionaries, were particularly effective. Leopold in turn posed as a Roman Catholic victim of the prejudice of Baptist missionaries, brought his own bishops into play and cultivated rich industrialists in all nations. Oh, it was a doozy of a PR battle.

If a moral we must find in this odd twinning of PR campaigns, I suppose it is that PR can be used for good or ill — and journalists now, as then, need to be very careful who they are being used by and for what ends.

Before we get into his motives, how about we tackle those pesky life toxins of yours with tai chi, a shot of wheatgrass juice, some gently strummed zither music?

You just dumped him. I think it's safe to assume that his motives for any bizarre or unpleasant behavior are to hurt you back because you just dumped him.

It may not be terribly evolved of him, and that may not be a good thing, but it's real and it's his call to make.

Likewise, your decision to be civil and bloom and grow was yours to make, and of course it's always the right one. But it stops being right the minute it crosses over into your deciding how he's supposed to behave. He's wounded. He's taking it like an ill-tempered juvenile. Pocket a lesson in grace: Let it go.

Dear Carolyn: I've been dating a woman for about eight months

The issue is that she not only comes from a bunch of money, but she lives a very lavish lifestyle—lots of parties, vacations, etc. I work really hard just to pay my bills and enjoy my simple, quiet life.

I don't know how to tell her without hurting her feelings that I don't want to do (and can't afford!) all those things. In her last relationship, the man was very jealous of her friends. I'm not, I just want to pay my rent and have time alone with her. —Broke and In Love Unless your Visa bill is a monolith and your poker face Mount Rushmore, I think the issue might be that an eight-month socialite sweetie hasn't clued in that she's dating a financially challenged homebody. Time to cut off the champagne.

Why don't you ask her how she feels? Surely your differences have presented themselves in the normal course of things—say, when she's at swell parties solo and jetting spa-ward without you. She might love you because of your quieter traits. Stop feeling inferior. Besides, if you can't be honest with each other about what you want—what you dream about and will settle for—forget the rest of your life. Forget the rest of the month.

Before you ask her, though, be relentlessly blunt with yourself. Will spending time alone with her on a compromise schedule—say, a couple or few days a week—be enough for you? She is who she is, and that has to guide what you expect.

Dear Carolyn:

My boyfriend of six years has a friend who was spreading rumors that I was sleeping around. I've been faithful, and my boyfriend now knows that this guy was lying.

My problem is I don't want to be in the company of this so-called friend, but my boyfriend and all his friends say I should just forget about it because they all know how their friend lies about everything. Well, I don't think I should forget about it. I say my boyfriend should have more respect for me. —R.A.P.

For such a small word, "should" bears a whole lot of freight.

Your boyfriend should punt this friend.

The malicious, parasitic friend should suffer the consequences of his actions.

Your boyfriend should have more respect for you. You should walk if your boyfriend won't show you that respect.

Those are the perfect-world shoulds. Now the real-world shoulds:

Old friends should look the other way when one of their ranks indulges old quirks, sometimes even malicious and parasitic ones. These ancient group relationships are complicated, and few would survive without a whole lot of looking the other way.

As his victim, you should feel free to have nothing to do with him, independently of your boyfriend and regardless of what others think. Two halves of a couple won't always agree on people, and sometimes disagree strongly. Part of the deal.

As the girlfriend, you should be outraged that your boyfriend even initially believed the rumors from his known-liar friend. That one, I'm not sure I'd get past.

Hi Carolyn:

My question is in reference to breaking up on a healthy and positive note in order to be able to grow and learn from a former relationship. OK, I've managed to do that (well, er, I'm trying) ... but he completely has not. I broke it off for good, then we saw each other at a mutual friend's party less than a week after. I ended our break-up conversation by saying to him, "Take care, best of luck and I wish you well." His response: "I'll try." Anyway, at the party he was as sweet as blueberry pie to my (not mutual) friends, offering to help one of them move into her new house, complimenting another on how nice she looks, etc. (He never complimented me while we were

Unicef's Deadly Mission

Race: a major issue in cable programming

"Breast is best." No, it's not the new slogan for Hooters restaurant. It's the mantra of breast-feeding advocates who promote their cause with a cult-like fervor around the world. Their extremism must be condemned.

I have nothing against breast-feeding. After weighing the pros and cons, I've been nursing my 5-and-a-half-month-old daughter since birth. Mother's milk offers my baby health benefits that man-made substitutes can't match. But in the hands of the United Nations Children's Fund, the breast-feeding crusade is killing the children it's supposed to protect.

In a horrific investigative report published in the Wall Street Journal this week, reporters Alix M.

Freedman and Steve Stecklow expose Unicef's homicidal mission to discourage AIDS-positive mothers from switching to infant formula. The United Nations' own statistics show that an estimated 3.4 million children have contracted AIDS from their mothers and died of the disease. Between 1.1 million and 1.7 million of those children, mostly in Africa, are believed to have been infected with HIV through breast-feeding.

There is a very simple solution: feed the babies formula. Top manufacturers Nestle and Wyeth are ready and willing to provide tons of tins of free formula to poor women in sub-Saharan Africa, the Journal reports, but Unicef adamantly refuses to support their offers.

The agency's health bureaucrats wield great influence in the Third World. The head office in New York is led by anti-corporate activists who care more about sending political messages to formula makers than about sending life-saving nourishment to babies in jeopardy. Unicef's grudge dates back to the 1970s, when breast-feeding extremists began a boycott of Nestle and other companies. The protesters believe the formulamakers "exploit" underprivileged women in developing nations by creating a "dependency" on infant formula.

The companies can't win. When they try to sell their products abroad, they're accused of profiteering. When they try to give their goods away, they're accused of public-relations gimmickry. The Journal reports that Unicef executive director Carol Bellamy, a former New York City Council president, angrily rebuffed efforts by Nestle to assist HIV-infected mothers. Wyeth's offer in 1998 to donate tons of free formula to African hospitals was scrapped when company officials simply asked Unicef not to bad-mouth them publicly.

Bellamy instead insists that the major formula makers comply with an inane U.N. regulatory code — passed long before AIDS hit Africa — which bans the distribution of free and low-cost formula. Ayn

Rand couldn't make this up. Unicef would rather throw millions of dollars worth of formula out with the babies, than undercut collective support for what they consider a morally superior choice to breast-feed.

Rather than accept free infant formula and save lives immediately, Unicef recommends that African women with AIDS allow their babies to breast-feed from other women. But there's a good chance that the babies will simply be getting infected milk from another woman. One Unicef official blithely supports pasteurized milk as an alternative when mothers contract AIDS. But babies don't usually begin drinking cow's milk until after one year. Without formula, mothers turn to dangerous substitutes such as sugar water and rice water.

Unicef's lieutenants in the breast-feeding camp continue to attack formula as unsafe and unhealthy. But in the developing world, iron-fortified formula is often superior to the milk of sick, malnourished women. Here in the West, we enjoy the comforts of fresh fruits and vegetables, multivitamins, and folic acid supplements — not to mention fancy electric pumps, bottles, and refrigerators to store breast milk safely when we have to separate from our babies.

In sub-Saharan Africa, mothers are lucky to eat a half-cup of rice per day — and must often work all day, away from their children, without the luxury of nannies, wet nurses, and basic health amenities. Nevertheless, Unicef executive director Carol Bellamy, told the Journal reporters: "We continue to advocate that breast is best."

Even if it kills.

Don't attempt to adjust your television set if it isn't getting enough color. It's not broken — you're probably just watching one of the major networks. It's no surprise that in November, members of the NAACP, the National Latino Media Council, the National Asian Pacific American Media Coalition and American Indians in Film banded together to give ABC and FOX a "D minus" NBC a "D plus" and CBS an "F" grade, when it comes to minority representation on their networks.

Television executives made an effort to make the fall season more diverse, after groups like the NAACP accused the major networks of white-washing programs last year. The NAACP's main concern isn't that there are no minorities on television, but there are hardly any in leading roles.

The National Council of La Raza, a watchdog organization for Hispanics in the entertainment industry, even sponsored a brownout of the major networks when a study revealed that Hispanics have the smallest representation on network television.

But what's the big deal? Television isn't reality anyway, so who cares if there aren't enough blacks or Asians on shows?

All races watch the tube, but advertisers and TV execs make money off of who they think has the most buying power and will give their network the greatest ratings. If blacks, Asians and Latinos are the groups being snubbed, then it's apparent whom those executives are pandering to.

Even though television is Hollywood's perception of reality, people still want to see they are being equally and fairly represented. Some people's only connection to other races is through accessible mediums such as television, so then shouldn't television reflect all the people who watch it, not just the greater majority?

"Dark Angel" (FOX) featuring Latina, Jessica Alba and "DAG" (NBC) featuring black comedian David Alan Grier, are only two of a handful of shows with minorities in leading roles, while other shows, such as "Ally McBeal" (FOX) and "Spin City" (ABC) integrate minorities into the supporting cast.

Most noticeably, CBS was forced to scrap the majority black cast of "City of Angels" due to low ratings. Some might argue that America isn't ready for a show that stars mostly blacks, or Latinos or Native Americans.

But "City of Angels" was a rare exception and it was the only majority black show in the entire networks have yet to give minorities a chance in our melting pot country. Until then, blacks will still have to settle for "The Cosby Show" as their television representation; Asian actors will have to fight over the rare karate expert/exchange student/math genius role they've been stereotyped into; Latinos will continue to have low representations on prime time television shows, even ones that take place in the Latin dense Los Angeles; and Native Americans will continue to be completely ignored.

The Stupidity Report

I used to think that laundry was a simple, easy task. All you have to do is put some clothes in a washer, add detergent, wash them, put them in a dryer, and then put them away. An easy process, right? Not so at WPU, where even the simplest of tasks becomes an adventure in stupidity.

When you want to do laundry, you first have to prepare yourself. I don't mean putting your dirty clothes in a laundry bag or anything like that; I mean sending scouts down to the laundry room to check for an open washer. There's nothing more disheartening than to drag the 30 pounds of laundry you've accumulated in the last month down to the laundry room only to find that all the washers are taken and still have 30 minutes left to go on them. To bypass this, just send two friends down to the laundry room. If there are washers free, one friend can hold the machine while the other friend comes back up and gives you a full report. Now that you've got yourself a machine, you think you're home free, right? Wrong!

If you're not careful, you'll probably get the washing machine that will break in the middle of your wash cycle. This has happened to me three times so far — in fact, I can't really recall a time when I've gone into the North

Tower laundry room and seen all the machines operational. I think that somewhere, a sadistic fiend is purposely booby-trapping the machines, just so some poor sap has to come back and wash their clothes all over again. However, if you can avoid the sabotaged washers, you're halfway done with your adventure. That is, if your clothes can be found. In the laundry game, timing is everything. You have to take your clothes out of the washer the exact minute the cycle is up — if you don't, they will be gone. If you're lucky, a considerate person will put them in an open dryer for you; if you're not lucky, they'll wind up on the floor some place, a garbage can, or possibly even Canada, depending on how much an ass the person is. However, with a proper stopwatch, you can prevent others from tossing your clothes around and hopefully snag a free dryer. Unfortunately, a free dryer is difficult to come by most of the time.

It goes without fail that every dryer is being used all the time. What mystifies me is that there are eight dryers and seven washers — wouldn't you think that at least one dryer would be free all the time? Of course not! Someone invariably puts their clothes in the dryer for about 180 minutes, just to make sure the one pair of underwear and two socks they put in there are extra dry. If, by chance, you come across a free dryer, I suggest you guard it with your life. Set up a tent and pull out your AK-47, because that dryer will be fought over more than territory in the Middle East.

Larry Clow

If you can get all your laundry done without either getting into a fight over a dryer or losing half your wardrobe, consider yourself fortunate. As for me, I'm waiting for a damn dryer and searching for three pairs of underwear and five socks that disappeared.

The Brainwashed vs. The Indifferent

The sale of our democracy has never been more apparent than during our current circus sideshow of an election. As it is, the American public is either glued to their television waiting for the latest Florida county to recount their ballots, or openly fed up and frustrated with the political system in general. The importance of this situation is that, while some Americans wait and devour every statistic the media can feed them and others change the channel in disgust, our democracy will still fall into the hands of corporate power whether Gore or Bush win the race.

Looking back at the race, the educated voter sees two parties running campaigns on millions of corporate dollars. The liberal Democrats chose vice president Al Gore as their candidate, a second generation career politician who would have to maneuver his way out of President Clinton's White House scandal and into the trust of America. On his half of the "Republican's" soft-money bought media time, he managed to trick most of the passive American public into believing his environmental concerns and catch phrase "I want to fight for you!" However, intelligent voters know his history of big talk on the campaign trail in '92 and '96 and his small action as vice president.

Jason Michael Morroni

With the Democrat's traditional domination in the women and minority vote, the vice-president was favored early to mop up the inexperienced Republican candidate George W. Bush. However, those who picked Gore out of the gate didn't foresee that the vice-president's campaign would be lame enough to give this bumbling, unqualified Texas governor a fair shot. Again, through corporate funded media exposure, Bush recited the Republican's strategic "compassionate conservative" ideals and sold a trillion dollar tax-cut plan to the American public. His public disdain for American bipartisan politics fooled enough of America to believe that he, like them, was fed up with the two party all or nothing American system. The Republican campaign worked so well that many Americans ignored Bush's hideous Texas record on issues such as the environment, the death penalty, and a woman's right to choose.

Turning back to the present, America sits and waits while their two corporate figureheads squabble and bicker over the electoral muscle of Florida, America's retirement home. For years, we have been the richest, most powerful nation in the world; yet we still do not have universal health care, police are still profiling youths and minorities and violating citizens rights all over the country, kids are still suffocating mentally in our inadequate public schools, and our environment is rotting for the profits of industry. Most importantly, our democracy is still given power to, by, and for the corporate dollar, and the majority of America is brainwashed and can't see that because it wasn't covered on the 10 o'clock news or they are so fed up and indifferent that they don't care.

An Important First Amendment Case Affecting State Universities

When a state university's administrator confiscates a student yearbook and refuses to distribute it because the yearbook is not of high quality, has the university violated the students' first amendment rights?

When the same state university administrator transfers the student publications coordinator because she refused to pull some comic strips from the school newspaper and refused to stop the publication of a letter to the editor, have the first amendment rights of the students been violated?

These were the questions posed to the United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Kincaid v. Gibson that was first argued on March 18, 1999 and decided on September 8, 1999. Then in a surprise move on November 29, 1999 the court vacated its decision and reheard the case on May 30, 2000. A new decision is pending.

The case involves the student publications at Kentucky State University and the ramifications for college student publications nationwide.

Kentucky State University is a state funded public university. The student newspaper and the yearbook are operated on school property and receive funding from the university. Back in 1992-1994 the student editor of the yearbook found herself without much help in putting together a two-year version of the yearbook. She picked the theme, "Kentucky State-Destination Unknown." She included photos of public figures unrelated to the school and she chose a purple cover instead of the school colors of green and gold. The vice-president of student affairs was so displeased with the yearbooks that she decided not to distribute them and secured the books with the intent to throw them away.

The same vice-president criticized the student newspaper for running certain comic strips that poked fun at the administration and other aspects of university life. When the vice-president instructed the student publications coordinator to direct the newspaper not to publish a particular letter to the editor, the coordinator refused on the grounds that such an action would violate the students' first amendment rights. The coordinator was then transferred without notice or a hearing.

After a grievance hearing, the publication coordinator was restored to her position with publishing guidelines and instructions from the vice-president.

The students sued in federal court alleging that the actions of the vice-president had violated their first amendment rights. In 1997 a federal trial court entered summary judgment in favor of the university and dismissed all of the students' first amendment claims.

On appeal the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Citing the case of Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier 484 U.S. 260(1988) the court found that the university did not intend the yearbook to be a public forum. The court concluded that the university had retained a sufficient degree of control and oversight to allow it to impose reasonable regulations over content and distribution. Because the yearbook had failed to meet university standards, the university was within its rights to confiscate the books.

As for the first amendment claim pertaining to the newspaper, the court found that the students had not been injured or "chilled" by the transfer of the student publications coordinator. The students apparently did not know the reason for the transfer and therefore, they were not adversely affected. Moreover, the publications coordinator had not censored the newspaper as

Gerry Brennan
SGA Attorney

instructed.

The court's reliance upon Hazelwood was most unsettling. Hazelwood involved the regulation of a high school newspaper published as part of a journalism class. Kincaid marked the first that a federal appeals court had used Hazelwood, a high school case, as a basis to uphold regulation of college publications.

The students petitioned for rehearing and on November 29, 1999 the court granted their request. A new hearing before all 13 circuit court judges was held on May 30, 2000.

At the oral argument, several of the judges were skeptical of the university's claim that the yearbook was not a public forum. At least one judge in particular, felt that confiscation of the yearbook amounted to impermissible alteration of content. A decision is expected shortly.

In the meantime, although the decision of September 8, 1999 is no longer valid, the yearbooks are still locked away in a university storage room.

DRINKING AND DRIVING KILLS

Ahhh...it's the holiday season. With the holidays comes a feeling of love and joy. I personally connect love with the holidays from the many incidences Santa Claus would annually expose himself to myself and my mother during my youth. Santa Claus would annually come burst into our home on Christmas Eve though either the back door or a shattering window and expose himself to myself and my mother while yelling obscenities and destroying our home. My mother was always quite terrorized during these annual visits...I however found them to be both educational and somewhat stimulating. It was through these experiences that I formed my opinions on relationships and the art that is love. The holidays bring out the best in everyone...and also the love. It was Santa's bravado that introduced me to the art of seduction and tender love. Being that it is the holiday season and I have a personal fetish with the season, The Love Hut will be dealing exclusively with holiday related inquiries. Thank You.

Holy Christmas Werhun! I've been with my girlfriend for almost three years. Unfortunately she has chosen the holiday season to end this relationship. I'm having a terrible time dealing with this emotional blow...especially during the holidays. Some mornings I feel like I can't even get up. Do you have any advice.

Sincerely,
Buffalokid@freemail

Well Buffalo, I feel your pain. This is a terrible time to end a relationship with a significant other. If you've already tried repeated phone calls and threats with no response, then it is probably time to get over her. This will be especially hard during this season of love and joy. Your best bet for forgetting is not even remembering. Just drown your sorrows in booze! Why be miserable when getting over somebody. Push your family and friends away and take some time for yourself...as much time as YOU need. A little liquid silly never hurt anyone!

Werhun, everyone thinks I'm a pedophile! I don't know what the problem is. For as long as I can remember, mothers have looked at me like an animal. I must just give of a vibe or something. I recently got a job working as an elf at the mall. I was working for less than one week when I was fired due to repeated complaints from parents and frightened children alike. I'm a completely normal looking guy and I've never been to prison, what the hell is the problem.

Sincerely,
Donuthole@yahoo.com

Wow! That is extremely strange. Unless you have NAM-BLA tattooed on your forehead or a beard I can't imagine what the problem might be. Maybe you need to take a more forward approach to controlling this problem. The next time you notice a worried looking parent or a child crossing the street to avoid you, simple approach them and tell them "I am not a pedophile"! Straighten them out before they have the opportunity to escape your presence with a false judgment in their heads. Good luck Donuthole.

Werhun, it's Christmas time and I'm still alone...like I am every year. I'm a 21 year old female and a very nice person. I am almost 250lbs and my left leg is shorter than my right, but I'm still a good person. Why must people be so shallow? I want someone to kiss at new years. Fairieprincessmoongoddess@hotmail.com

Why don't you lead by example? Show the world that it's about more than just appearances. You can't bring the men to you, so why not go to them. If there's one thing I know it's that homeless men are always looking for a little ass...or a big ass. They just like ass. However, just because they're homeless doesn't mean they are bad people. You're Romeo might be under a box somewhere. Don't be SHALLOW and cast this idea aside. You should know better than anybody that appearance isn't everything. Take a bus to the city and shatter some stereotypes...Yeah!!!

Note from the diversity editor—
This article is for humorous purposes only. — AC

"The reign of tears is over. The slums will soon be only a memory. We will turn our prisons into factories and our jails into storehouses and corncribs. Men will walk upright now, women will smile, and the children will laugh. Hell will be forever for rent."

That is how Billy Sunday, the noted evangelist and leading crusader against Demon Rum, greeted the onset of Prohibition in early 1920. We know now how tragically his hopes were doomed. New prisons and jails had to be built to house the criminals spawned by converting the drinking of spirits into a crime against the state. Prohibition undermined respect for the law, corrupted the minions of the law, created a decadent moral climate-but did not stop the consumption of alcohol.

Despite this tragic object lesson, we seem bent on repeating precisely the same mistake in the handling of drugs.

ETHICS AND EXPEDIENCY

On ethical grounds, do we have the right to use the machinery of government to prevent an individual from becoming an alcoholic or a drug addict? For children, almost everyone would answer at least a qualified yes. But for responsible adults, I, for one, would answer no. Reason with the potential addict, yes. Tell him the consequences, yes. Pray for and with him, yes. But I believe that we have no right to use force, directly or indirectly, to prevent a fellow man from committing suicide, let alone from drinking alcohol or taking drugs.

I readily grant that the ethical issue is difficult and that men of goodwill may well disagree. Fortunately, we need not resolve the ethical issue to agree on policy. Prohibition is an attempted cure that makes matters worse for both the addict and the rest of us. Hence, even if you regard present policy toward drugs as ethically justified, considerations of expediency make that policy most unwise.

Prohibition and Drugs Milton Friedman

Consider first the addict. Legalizing drugs might increase the number of addicts, but it is not clear that it would. Forbidden fruit is attractive, particularly to the young. More important, many drug addicts are deliberately made by pushers, who give likely prospects their first few doses free. It pays the pusher to do so because, once hooked, the addict is a captive customer. If drugs were legally available, any possible profit from such inhumane activity would disappear, since the addict could buy from the cheapest source.

Whatever happens to the number of addicts, the individual addict would clearly be far better off if drugs were legal. Today, drugs are both incredibly expensive and highly uncertain in quality. Addicts are driven to associate with criminals to get the drugs, become criminals themselves to finance the habit, and risk constant danger of death and disease.

Consider next the test of us. Here the situation is crystal clear. The harm to us from the addiction of others arises almost wholly from the fact that drugs are illegal. A recent committee of the American Bar Association estimated that addicts commit one-third to one-half of all street crime in the U.S. Legalize drugs, and street crime would drop dramatically. Moreover, addicts and pushers are not the only ones corrupted. Immense sums are at stake. It is inevitable that some relatively low-paid police and other government officials-and some high-paid ones as well-will succumb to the temptation to pick up easy money.

LAW AND ORDER

Legalizing drugs would simultaneously reduce the amount of crime and raise the quality of law enforcement. Can you conceive of any other measure that would accomplish so much to promote law and order?

But, you may say, must we accept defeat? Why not simply end the drug traffic? That is where experience under Prohibition is most relevant. We cannot end the drug traffic. We may be able to cut off opium from Turkey but there are innumerable other places where the opium poppy grows.

With French cooperation, we may be able to make Marseilles an unhealthy place to manufacture heroin but there are innumerable other places where the simple manufacturing operations involved can be carried out. So long as large sums of money are involved-and they are bound to be if drugs are illegal-it is literally hopeless to expect to end the traffic or even to reduce seriously its scope. In drugs, as in other areas, persuasion and example are likely to be far more effective than the use of force to shape others in our image.

Winter is such a wonderful time of year. We celebrate the holidays with family and friends, enjoy landscapes blanketed with snow, sip steaming mugs of cider after a long day out in the nippy air, take sleigh rides, go skiing, skate and ski. Of course, there are also ways to enjoy this time of year other than the traditional winter pastimes.

Try furniture racing, for example. Every April in Whitish, Mont., the Whitefish Ski Resort celebrates the end of the ski season with the Big Mountain Furniture Race.

The event started about 30 years ago when a couple of ski patrollers with nothing better to do decided to put a couch on some skis and ride it down the mountain. The combination of living-room comfort and high-speed, high-altitude exhilaration evidently tapped a heretofore-unknown need in the human psyche, because the race has been steadily growing ever since.

For a $50 entry fee, anyone can enter. All you need some sort of furniture (and for the purposes of this race "furniture" is defined very loosely) affixed to skis or snowboards. Each craft must have a functioning brake, and every contestant has to wear a helmet. Each craft gets only one run down the hill, and points are awarded for speed, appearance and accuracy. The accuracy comes in at the bottom of the hill, where a target has been set up; the idea is to get as close to the target as possible without touching it. A local furniture store donates a leather recliner worth $500 as the grand prize.

Some entrants go for speed, using lightweight rockin' chairs to make their vehicles. Others go more for creativity, using items such as armoires, baby cribs, trash cans, tents and even coffins. Some entrants go for numbers, getting as many as 20 people to ride on the craft. The more, the merrier, I suppose. My favorite, though, is an entire living-room scene, complete with sofa, recliner, coffee table, side table, pizza and beer. That's what I call competing in style!

The Jeffrey Hart Column

The Gore campaign didn't end when the polls closed in Florida on Nov. 7. Instead, the campaign continued -- if anything more furiously. Indeed, Wednesday morning, when there appeared to be no clear result, Al Gore's campaign chair Billy Daley appeared on television with a statement. The first thing he said was "The campaign goes on."

The people around Al Gore are very tough. Daley, of course, grew up amid the most brutal kind of Chicago politics, when graveyards and vacant lots voted. His father's (former Chicago mayor Richard Daley) police harassed reformers, reporters and good government types, and the machine always won.

Donna Brazile, Gore's official campaign manager, was kicked out of the 1988 Michael Dukakis presidential campaign for unethical conduct. During this year's Republican National Convention, she opined that Colin Powell cared more about photo ops with kids than about doing anything for them.

Gore crony Peter Knight has appeared on CNN to, apparently, "threaten" Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris. He said that "it would be just terrible for her" if she kept on insisting on the Tuesday 5 p.m. deadline for submitting results. "Just terrible?" In fact, Florida law requires exactly that seven-day limit.

campaign rolls on. Jesse Jackson has been trotted out to claim that minority voters have been intimidated, yak, yak, scowling.

Lies abounded. We were told that the "butterfly ballot" used in Palm Beach is "illegal." Well, Florida law does specify that the names listed on a ballot should be in a single column, the votes recorded to their right. But that section of the law applies only to paper ballots. Another section applies to machine-scanned ballots, of which the butterfly ballot is an example. It is perfectly legal, lies to the contrary.

If the Gore gang reminds you of the fight over impeachment, you are onto something.

Early in the Monica Lewinsky scandal, President Clinton commissioned a poll by Dick Morris. Morris reported that people would overlook the adultery but not perjury. Clinton thought for a moment and said, "Well, we'll just have to win politically."

The first thing to do was change the subject. So they declared war on Kenna Starr and demonized him. Starr became the center of attention. It was uncool to be "adjudged" about mere sex.

Now, of course, Harris is playing the role of Starr -- it's her head sticking through the hole in the bull's-eye.

I particularly liked those big, expensive ads in "The New York Times," part of the post-election-day Gore campaign. In one, declaring a constitutional emergency because of the butterfly ballot and mandating a new election, no less, in Palm Beach, were the usual Hollywood boozers and airheads (Bianca Jagger, Rosie O'Donnell, Robert De Niro) and the usual prostitute academics who support statements they could not possibly believe.

This Gore operation is extremely ugly. And it probably will get uglier.

Pioneer Times is 'piece of crap'

Editor:

I recently picked up a copy of the "Pioneer Times." At first I thought it was a joke, then I realized that it really was a feeble attempt at a newspaper. Needless to say it was really bad. What's up with that? Why are there two campus newspapers at William Paterson? Why is the Pioneer Times so pathetic?

The Beacon is much better than the Pioneer Times in every aspect. I actually enjoy reading The Beacon every week. The Pioneer Times had articles written by six people. It takes them six people to write one article? And the articles were BORING! Most of the time news stories (Brett Banfe, movie reviews, Sopranos lecture, voting, etc.) were already covered in The Beacon—months ago. Also, there were innumerable grammatical errors with almost every story in the Pioneer Times. I can't believe the journalism department permits a newsletter like the Pioneer Times to be circulated on this campus with so many typos and punctuation problems.

Are the students who write for the Pioneer Times supposed to be journalism students? If that's the case, William Paterson is showing the community what type of journalism students it is sending into the workforce: students who cannot write and students who cannot design a paper that is at least decent. The president of the university should pull the plug on the Pioneer Times because it is making the university look like a joke. Prospective students and their parents may pick up that second grade news bulletin and decide that students at William Paterson do not know how to write and produce a quality newspaper. The Beacon is the only saving grace in the situation; I hope it circulates at every location the Pioneer Times circulates.

I also would like to know where the money is coming from for the Pioneer Times since I did not see any advertisements in it or the money coming from our tuition and fees? If so, I object to my money being spent on a piece of crap that no one reads.

What's in a domain name?

The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers -- a governing body that controls the earth and most of the planets in our solar system -- recently announced new domain names.

Instead of just the usual .com (for commercial), .org (for organizations), and .net (for fishing supply and bait dealers), domain names will now include .biz (for business, or in some parts of the country, "bidness"), .name (for people with names) and .pro (for professionals, such as myself).

I learned what a highly regarded professional I am when I received an e-mail saying I was a "potential candidate" for a free listing in the 2000-2001 Edition of the International Executive Guild Registry!

It was obvious they were very familiar with the quality of my work because right at the top it said, "Dear Professional."

Of course, it could be that .pro actually designates professional wrestling sites, of which there can never be too many.

But despite the additional domains, we still need more, such as:

- .commie — It's not fair. We have .com, but no .commie for our friends of the pinko persuasion! Ralph Nader, for instance, with his talk of nationalizing certain industries, is getting pretty far to the left. Next election his Web site may have to be called "naderforpresident.commie."

- .ez$ — One of the advantages of Internet access is the opportunity to receive an endless supply of sure-fire money-making opportunities. The .ez$ domain name would help consumers identify these companies so they could get started on the road to financial freedom!

Not that all Internet money-making opportunities come from private companies. I recently received an e-mail chain letter promising big bucks.

I would have trashed it except that the writer assured me it was legal because—this is true—"I checked with a friend who is a lawyer, so it can't be crooked!"

That's all the legal advice I needed!

(Editor's note: If you receive this email from me, DO NOT BREAK THE CHAIN or you and your descendants will have 350 years of bad luck!) [Beacon Editor's Note: OK, Don. We'll take your advice.—RC]

- joke — When it comes to joke-circulating productivity, American workers are second to none. Americans, through the Internet, spread more jokes in less time than ever dreamed possible.

Fed Chairman Allen Greenspan credited this productivity with helping hold down the high cost of humor.

However, during the third quarter of 2000, economists detected what seems to be a softening in the rate of joke productivity.

If this trend continues, other countries may catch up to or even surpass the American standard of humor.

We need a "joke" domain to ease access to the humor-producing companies that help supply the raw material for office workers' email messages.

- .xxx — If you can't guess what this category is for, make an appointment with your favorite health care professional and asked to be checked for tell-tale signs of a lobotomy.

The recent presidential election has gone into the history books as one of those events that people will cite as an example of democracy at its best: Chaotic at times, rancorous, but always mindful that in the end, whoever takes office does so under the law.

There is one election result that has been largely overlooked in the flurry of recounts and that is the rejection of school vouchers by a margin of 2-1 where they were on the ballot. As readers of this column know, I have never supported the school voucher program. I have always felt it would take much-needed funds from the public schools.

I believe in private schools—both secular and religious. I feel they have always been an important part of our overall educational system. But a democracy needs a fully functioning public school system to assure that everyone has access to the best possible education we can provide. And that, I believe, is where the problem lies. I believe that education should be the responsibility of the states. However, for our nation to compete in an increasingly technological economy with countries that are funding the education of their young people to take part in this growing global economy, we need to do some serious rethinking of our education policies. For example, we should increase federal support for states to pay for raising public school standards across the country. All of us benefit by having a well-educated population regardless of where our people live. What do you think?

(FYI: Many of the countries that are expected to be our major global competitors are sending their young people to America's best universities. Should we do less for Note: If you're in New York this week, hie yourself to the Hudson Guild Theater at 441 West 26 St. in Manhattan to see the play, "Long Road Home." It's a life-affirming story of a battered woman's journey out of her personal darkness into a bright new life.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

All letters to the editor must be signed and contain the author's full name and daytime and evening telephone numbers. All letters will be verified for authenticity prior to publication. Letters should not exceed 500 words. Anonymous letters will promptly be filed in the shredder; if we put our names on the stuff we write, so should you. The best medium for sending a letter to the editor is through email. Since we are understaffed like most organizations, we do not have time to retype a zillion letters. Since the volume of mail may exceed the space available for printing, the editor may literally pick letters for publication out of a top hat. (Ryan Calazzo really does have a black top hat in his office). The Beacon does not censor content (see our mission statement) and will print any signed and verified letter that is not libelous otherwise prohibited by law.

HOROSCOPES

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Don't be sheepish about asking more questions before making a major decision at your workplace. Your personal relationships continue to improve.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) You might be rushed into renewing an old, cold relationship. But do you really want a reheated romance when there's a chance to warm up with someone new?

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Someone tells you something that could lead you to rethink your plans for the holidays. But get the full story before you make a decision.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A financial matter that had you in a dither is finally being sorted out as more facts become available. A perplexing personal matter also clears up.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You face a slew of new tasks at home and at work.

So, as much as you love being a social Lion, be careful not to overdo it at those pre-holiday parties.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Unexpected news could cause some minor adjustments in your holiday planning. Defer a decision about a financial matter until you have more facts.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A project might not be showing the results you'd hoped it would by now. But stay with it — things will soon begin to turn around.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) That budding personal relationship continues to develop. Things also improve in your career, although some problems still need close attention.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Jupiter, your ruling planet, takes a strong romantic turn at this time, happily affecting relationships for both single and spliced Archers.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Allowing a misunderstanding to go unchallenged could jeopardize plans you've made for the upcoming holidays. Clear the air now.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) While you should be open to suggestions on how to plan for the holidays, you should also be firm in saying "no" to anything with which you disagree.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20). Get out from under all those holiday preparations and immerse yourself in a world of music. You'll soon feel refreshed, revived — maybe even reborn.

YOU WERE BORN THIS WEEK: You believe in the truth, and you have little patience with those who try to hide it. You would make an excellent judge.

Lyricist Lounge Vol. 11 Record Release Show at ROSELAND

Aaron
Werschulz
Insider Writer

On Friday, December 1, I had the opportunity to attend the Lyricist Lounge Vol. 11 record release show at Roseland Ballroom on 52nd Street in New York City. Unfortunately, my brother and I had to wait two hours in a freezing cold and missed the first hour and a half of the show. When we did get in, we were greeted by a few minutes of a few DJs spinning over bee-bop. Dave Chapelle, who I had never met before, came out and performed "Cocoa Brovaz," who I had never heard of before. After dropping verses from his album "Sabaam Sahdeeq on Rhyme I Write" on the show. They immediately moved up the spot, capturing the attention of hip-hop fans a few good laughs while Mos Def's band, Jack Johnson, prepared for their performance. When the band was ready, Mos Def came out to an extremely excited crowd. He started off by performing a song which utilized a Jimi Hendrix's Band of Gypsies riff and Mos Def's original lyrics. They then did their own version of Sting's "Roxanne." Other fine points of his performance were "Hip-Hop," a song off of his latest release, Black on Both Sides, and when Talib Kweli joined him and they both launched into "Definition", off of their well known project, Mos Def and Talib Kweli are Black Star.

In between the songs, Mos explained that the name of his live band is the name of the first ever black heavyweight boxing champion. He also pleaded with the audience to join in on a march set for the next day to demonstrate about Mumia Abu-Jamal's situation. After this, I looked at the clock on my cell phone. Seeing it was two in the morning, and realizing that I had things to do the next day, I decided to call it an evening.

"I am Rock and Roll's Grandson. Remember Me?"—Mos Def

The crowd responded very well to Talib's performance, especially when he performed his latest single, "Move Somethin'". While Talib was still on stage, Pharoahe Monch came out and performed "Simon Says", which had the audience bouncing with their hands waving. Immediately after that Xzibit made his presence known and announced the release date of his new album Restless, which hits the shelves on December 12. The Michigan native then proceeded to perform one of his songs off of his new album.

The whole crew then retreated, leaving Dave Chapelle to entertain us with

"They said that Hip-Hop destroyed Rock and Roll. Well, it's about to save it now."
—Mos Def

Overall I can say that what I did see of the show was excellent. However I do regret having to leave before the show ended, and missing the first two hours of it as well. My advice to anyone attending a show that may be at the Roseland Ballroom is to try hard as hell to find another venue.

much diversity.
Next, Talib Kweli came out to perform some of the songs off of his and DJ Khaled's latest release, Train of Thought.

CONVERGE AT CBGBS

NEW EP FROM NJHC KINGS

Since 1995, New Jersey Hardcore band Ensign has been kicking ass and taking names. And their latest EP/7", For What It's Worth (Nitro Records), is no exception. This EP features four brand new songs by the NJHC kings that focus on the precision and energy they are known for.

Jacob Claveloux
Insider Editor

Their post-core message has never been stronger as is evidenced through lyrics like, "It's not a revolution, just to be aware. Take away the blinders, see things for the first time, discontent with the state of complacency that we see so prevalent in today's society. THE WORLD STILL NEEDS DREAMERS AND I WAS BORN TO BE THE ONE..." Tim Shaw, vocalist and the only original member of Ensign, also shows the listener an introspective, self-aware side, on "Nine-One-Zero-Zero," which is a nice thing to see from the usually gruff, faultless persona that most Hardcore singers give off. The first and fourth songs on the album are going to be featured on Ensign's upcoming full length, The Price of Progression.

With such a tight EP, no doubt that will be a disc worth waiting for. In the meantime, though, you should go see Ensign give the killer live performance they are known for. Who knows, maybe they will play William Paterson University's WPSC studio again, as they did last Spring.

At the last moment possible, I finally had an opportunity to go see Converge. The wonderful Beacon paid my admission and basically made my night. I don't remember where Converge played around here last but I do remember that it was a hell of a long time ago. I biased to Hoboken doing close to ninety miles per hour and made there in about ten minutes. The PATH was horrible as always and packed with people as well. When I got off at my stop, I literally ran to CB's.

As I entered the crowded, smoky, Most Precious Blood decision members) were d-stroke. It was almost imble to push your way to front. I saw a girl rush out of the pit with bloovering her hands and nose. Another guy this time, also got his nose smashed. The bottom line is that this hardcore be sick! They have the greatest sound, live (CD, and really draw in the crowd, by the way it. If you do happen to see them, beware the pit, your nose might be next.

Cave-in is to go on next and they took their s-ass fucking time doing it. These look like glam rock stars. I remember then Cave-in was good, what happened to them? They sound like pure I seriously almost passed out with combination of heat and boredom. I had these glowing toy guns and thoked really stupid waving them at like little kids. There were times they would not play any music but one I. Out of nowhere, a sudden charge-out electricity erupted which what impressed me. But all-in-all, CB is boring so don't ing severe brain damage. The guitarist had a cast on and was still wailing out. The vocalist himself, along with the half-naked drummer that slipped and jumped into the crowd of no one, couldn't even control himself as he jumped onto a pile of people that held him upwards. Converge has a sound of deep, beating insanity that tries to take over your soul. After Converge's short, grueling set, they wrecked everything (meaning their equipment) on stage and proved that they were a force to be reckoned with.

bother wasting your time. Then, it was time. I knew in my head that Converge was about to fuck shit up. And fuck shit up is what they did. I've never seen CBGB's explode as it did this evening. Flying bodies off the stage made more of the crowd's hunger for action. The lead vocalist, wearing full sleeves, shoved the mic halfway down his throat. At one point, he smacked a kid in the head with the mic, probably causing

Does Your Band Rock? Expo

Finally, Bly Pat's Pub at William Paterson University is becoming a great place for college students to hang out, drink, and listen to bands play! On November 16, 2000, Residence Life and the Music and Entertainment Industry Student Association (MEISA) sponsored the "Does Your Band Rock? Expo." The night proved to be an extremely entertaining one, and well worth the $1 admission price. A total of four bands played. The music started out fairly calm and progressed to outright craziness!

The first band on was supposed to be The Down To Earth Approach. Unfortunately, the band couldn't make it, but Brandon Hans saved the day. Hans and Jon Lillo (the "Approach's" front man), both William Paterson music students and members of MEISA, played acoustic guitar. Brandon learned the songs, normally played by Jon's band, in only two days and did a great job. The audience was very impressed with the performance. Jon and Brandon were the perfect beginning to the night.

Next up was Pequannock, New Jersey's "Casual Blue." Slightly more upbeat (perhaps because they weren't just acoustic), this band had it all together. Their equipment was top notch and was very professional. Look out for them; we just might see them getting a label deal soon!

The third band up was "The Link," in their debut performance.

The band consisted of former members of one of William Paterson's most familiar bands, "Beyond Mirth." The crowd was overwhelmed. All band members are part of William Paterson's music department. I can really see this band going places. Matt has great energy as the leading man, and the backup singing of Andy, Greg, and Nick was something to be noted. Their songs always prove to be unequalled! Look out for "The Link" in future Willy P. performances.

Last, as they say, but not least, came "Because of the Sun." The lead singer, Gabe Lugo, led the band into pretty insane music. The crowd, which consisted mainly of Gabe's fraternity brothers and other "Because of the Sun" fans, went wild. Unfortunately, none of the guys would mosh with me! The band also included member of MEISA, Mike Haughey on drums, his brother Bill Haughey on guitar, and Mike Wilson on bass.

Between sets, Josh Nicosia, member of MEISA and head of MEISA's Pioneer Record Label committee, spun some tunes. He focused on house music, which some students had a hard time dancing to. I guess most of the students are more used to mainstream club music. It was too bad, because Josh did a great job.

Raffle tickets were also sold at the event to raise money for MEISA's Pioneer Records. Pioneer Records was developed this year through MEISA and will be run entirely by the members, with the help of their advisor, Dr. Stephen Marcone. Be sure to be on the lookout for their first album release next semester, which will surely include some of the bands we saw this night.

All in all, the night was fun-filled. Although it got off the ground a little late, everything met the high expectations of William Paterson students. Please look out for future MEISA events including the Battle of the Bands on January 27, 2001 in Billy Pat's Pub to be co-sponsored by the Audio Engineering Society and the Student Activity. Programming Board and SAPB's Springfest event "Get 'Leid' at the Pub" featuring "The Nerds" to be co-sponsored by SAPB and the Junior class.

Thank you to all the bands, members of MEISA, Resident Assistant Allison Smith and the William Paterson Community for making this night one that really rocked!

"No One Under 17 Admitted"

Prohibiting minors from seeing a film because of its "Sexual Content" usually indicates that the film is pornographic and has received an "X" rating but for Darren Aronofsky's Requiem for a Dream, the decision to exclude anyone under 18 from seeing the film—whether or not they are accompanied by a parent—was made by the film's production company, Artisan Entertainment, in an effort to sidestep an NC17 rating, despite the ban's unintended consequence of eliminating people who may stand to gain the most from the film's harrowing scenes of drug use—teens.

The movie, an adaptation of Hubert Selby Jr.'s novel, was given an NC17 rating by the Motion Picture Association of America, leading Artisan to reject the rating and release the film as unrated while asking theaters to admit adults only. One scene of a private sex party seems to have led to Requiem's rating difficulties. That scene, depicts the character Marion Silver, played by Jennifer Connelly, and how her addiction determines just how far she will go in debasing herself to acquire the heroin she craves. The scene gives the viewer a chilling insight into the pitfalls of addiction and an extremely bleak view of Marion's situation and prospects for the future, and it is easy to see how viewers of any age could find it disturbing.

Keeping minors out of the theaters showing Requiem raises the issue of parental supervision, if not censorship, according to Professor Anthony J. Mazzella of the William Paterson University English Department. Professor Mazzella, who teaches the Films and Literature course and has had his examinations of the film adaptations of Henry James' novels published, cites the long-standing attitude of Americans toward films, one that endorses (and financially rewards) raw violence in films while finding raw sexuality unacceptable. He also points out that Artisan Entertainment's decision to exclude minors affects parents, as well. "They have decided in advance of parents deciding," Professor Mazzella said, "that the parents are not able to make that decision."

It is unlikely that most parents would want their children to witness the ugly descent of Requiem's characters into sub-humanity that the film details so viscerally, but the inevitable downward slide of the characters' lives makes a compelling, if sometimes brutal, warning against the drug abuse that frightens so many of those same parents.

Encounter

Vestiges of golden rays vanish,
by the encounter with the night,
and the shining stars.
Two silhouettes appears reflected,
against the surface of a pond
where the rays of moon witnesses
the lover's encounter that wish to remain in each other's arms,
for a lifetime.

FUCK

FUCK--

any introspective thought on the perils of existence will no longer intrigue you, that word will be the only focal point resonating in your skull.

Either you are ruled by your puritan ideas and the very word causes a feeling of abhorrence to rise in you like the mercury in the rectal thermometer of a ill infant.
Or perhaps you are too indulged in the epicurean side of this society and the mere mention of this word throws your genitals into a hormonal frenzy to the point where you cannot break loose of the title long enough to hear my words.

I could list, in detail
a plan that would nurse every starving child or a cure for every human ailment but your arrogance affects you like that of Oedipus' needles;
it blinds you.

Such a short Anglo-Saxon word stops any positive progress in the brain of Tipper and causes her to commission other lonely housewives to petition against hip-hop music.
And when the FCC bans Public Enemy they sit back in their lazy-boys and release a sanctimo-nious sigh.

Congratulations! Now the world's a better place;
now you can walk through the streets of Paterson and feel a little safer, you can loosen the grip on your pocket-book and your precious fake pearls.
Because now there is a PARENTAL ADVISORY sticker on any CD that dares to mention that forbidden word.

Now I can rest.
If our focus was directed on a goal that is significant then perhaps we could have utopia, but what does it matter?
You stopped listening after—

THE BILL OF RIGHTS

The First 10 Amendments to the Constitution as Ratified by the States
December 15, 1791

Preamble
Congress OF THE United States
began and held at the City of New York, on Wednesday the Fourth of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty nine.

THE Conventions of a number of the States having at the time of their adopting the Constitution, expressed a desire, in order to prevent misconception or abuse of its powers, that further declaratory and restrictive clauses should be added: And as extending the ground of public confidence in the Government, will best insure the beneficent ends of its institution

RESOLVED by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two thirds of both Houses concurring, that the following Articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, as Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, all or any of which Articles, when ratified by three fourths of the said Legislatures, to be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution; viz.:

ARTICLES in addition to, and Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America, proposed by Congress, and ratified by the Legislatures of the several States, pursuant to the fifth Article of the original Constitution.

"NO COMMENT!"

EVERY DAY YOU USE THE
BILL OF RIGHTS AND
YOU DON'T EVEN KNOW IT.

For 200 years the Bill of Rights and subsequent amendments have secured our freedoms as Americans. In fact, these constitutional rights have become such a part of our everyday life that we tend to take them for granted, which is unfortunate because without them, you would not even have the freedom to read this ad, nor would we have the freedom to run it.

THE CONSTITUTION • THE WORDS WE LIVE BY.

THE COMMISSION ON THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION INVITES ALL AMERICANS TO CELEBRATE "THE BILL OF RIGHTS AND BEYOND" IN 1991.

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE: THE CONSTITUTION, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006-3999.

Amendment I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

A well regulated Militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Amendment VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

A letter from Perry Odak, President and CEO of Ben & Jerry's

and cream from the family farmers of the St. Albans Dairy Cooperative.

- * The company will continue to use rBGH free dairy products and to pay a premium to the St. Albans Cooperative for rBGH free milk.
- * The company will continue with and Island Paradise to support the Tom Joyner Foundation in its work providing students with scholarships to the Historically Black Colleges and Universities.

May I also take a moment to answer the specific points raised on a website that is independent of Ben Cohen. The Unilever and Ben & Jerry's agreement, signed by Ben Cohen, included an agreed procedure to select a new CEO. Unilever followed this procedure to the letter. As I've said, I believe Yves Couette is the best person to lead the company.

We will continue to look at producing an organic line, but the time is not right at the moment. Long before Ben & Jerry's merger with Unilever the company looked at the possibility of an organic line and decided not to proceed. That decision was based on the fact that our product is rBGH-free and our market research showed that customers did not see the value added in organic ice cream especially with the higher price required. Even though we have not introduced an organic product we have launched The Vermont Dairy Farm Sustainability Project whose purpose is to reduce the adverse impact of dairy farming on water supply.

As already noted, the alternative supplier relationships the company has are preserved in the merger. Before the merger the company had reached the conclusion that adding alternate suppliers whose businesses are start-ups and/or who are reliant on Ben & Jerry's as their sole or primary customer is not a sound model for social justice. We cannot control the life cycle of a flavor in the marketplace. When a flavor sale rate declines, as it usually does, the impact can be ruinous for a small business without significant other customers. We will continue to look for opportunities to achieve social justice in our procurement activities, but the model must be sustainable.

With regard to "Fair Trade" ingredients. Never in the company's history has it used certifiably fair traded ingredients. As you know our products are primarily dairy based and all our milk and cream is rBGH free and comes from the family farmers of the St. Albans Cooperative. You may wish to review our annual social performance assessment which is available at our web site (www.benjerry.com) for a fuller discussion of our supplier relationships.

On the social audit, Unilever is already reviewing its global corporate social responsibility program, and Ben Cohen visited the company's headquarters in London to talk about the next steps. Finally Unilever has deposited $5 million for Ben's Venture Capital Fund. As the fund is for Ben and not Ben & Jerry's Homemade Inc. it has no connection to the company.

It is regrettable that, despite these facts, Ben has concluded the social mission is in jeopardy under the merger. In my view there is no reason to reach such a conclusion. I have spent many hours with the recently announced new CEO, Yves Couette, and I can assure you he is committed to preserving and enhancing Ben & Jerry's unique mission. He is well suited to leading Ben & Jerry's as an independent company within the Unilever framework. His most recent experience was doing exactly that with an ice cream company Unilever had acquired in Mexico.

The strongest testament to the company and to its founders is the carrying on of its social mission even with change. There are many keepers of the flame at Ben & Jerry's - our staff, our franchisees and our business partners, all of whom care deeply about the company and its values. As Unilever has said, let us judge them by their actions. Perry D. Odak

Dear all,

Thank you for your concern about Ben & Jerry's. As President and CEO of Ben & Jerry's for the last four years it has been my pleasure to work with 800 people who are passionate about this company and its unique mission to create great products and sound economic returns while including a concern for the local, national and global community in the day-to-day operation of the business. This core set of values is what has made the company so successful over the years and what made the company so appealing to Unilever. Having gone through the merger process step-by-step, I can assure you Unilever is also committed to this vision for the future of Ben & Jerry's.

The merger agreement itself is, in my view, unprecedented in the care and attention it gives to Ben & Jerry's independence and the preservation of its values. Just to give you some examples, for the foreseeable future:

- * The company will remain Vermont-based.
- * The company will continue to buy its milk its Eco-Pint made from unbleached paper and with its progress toward a completely compostable container.

- * The company will continue the expansion of its unique PartnerShop Program where Ben & Jerry's franchise stores are owned and operated by non-profits.

- * The company will continue to support progressive social change work through its employee-led Foundation and Community Action Teams active at each of its five sites. (Unilever has made a minimum ten-year commitment to $1.1 Million per year for philanthropy.)

- * The company will continue its commitment to suppliers like the Greyston Bakery in Yonkers, New York that in addition to providing much needed jobs, also supports the many vital community programs of the Greyston Foundation.

Plans for 2001 already approved by Unilever include all of the above projects plus the introduction of a couple of great new flavors with licensing agreements that actualize our social mission. ## Christmas Cookies

Knock You Naked Brownies

- 1 package German chocolate cake mix (18.5 oz)
- 1 cup chopped nuts
- 1/3 cup + 1/2 cup evaporated milk-divided
- 1/2 cup melted butter
- 60 vanilla caramels unwrapped (one 14 oz package)
- 1 cup semisweet chocolate chips

In a large mixing bowl, combine dry cake mix, nuts, 1/3 cup evaporated milk and melted butter. Press half of the batter into the bottom of a greased 13x9x2 inch glass baking dish. Bake in a preheated 350 degree oven for eight minutes.

In the microwave or top of a double boiler melt caramels with remaining 1/2 cup evaporated milk. When caramel mixture is well mixed, pour over baked layer. Cover with chocolate chips. Chill for about an hour or until the caramel is hard. Press the remaining batter on top of morsels. Return to oven and bake 28 minutes (or less for gooier brownies). Let cool before cutting.

Gingerbread Cookies

- 6 cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon baking powder
- 1/2 pound (2 sticks) unsalted butter
- 1 cup dark-brown sugar, packed
- 4 teaspoons ground ginger
- 4 teaspoons ground cinnamon
- 1 1/2 teaspoons ground cloves
- 1 teaspoon finely ground black pepper
- 1 1/2 teaspoons salt
- 2 large eggs

- 1 cup unsulfured molasses

INSTRUCTIONS

In a large bowl, sift together flour, baking soda, and baking powder. Set aside. In the bowl of an electric mixer, cream butter and sugar until fluffy. Mix in spices and salt, then eggs and molasses. Add flour mixture; combine on low speed. Divide dough in thirds; wrap in plastic. Chill for at least 1 hour. Preheat oven to 350 F. On a floured surface, roll dough 1/8-inch thick. Cut into desired shapes with cookie cutters. Transfer to ungreased baking sheets; refrigerate until firm, 15 minutes. Bake 8 to 10 minutes, or until crisp but not darkened. Let cookies cool on wire racks, then decorate as desired.

Chocolate Chip Cookies

- 1-1/2 C. sifted flour
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1 C. shortening (part butter for flavor)
- 3/4 C. firm pack brown sugar

- 1 tsp. soda, dissolved in 1 tsp. hot water
- 1 C. nutmeats
- 1 pkg. chocolate chips
- 2 C. Mother's Oats
- 1 tsp. vanilla

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Heat oven to 375 degrees.
2. Cream shortening and sugars together.
3. Add eggs, soda and water, and vanilla.
4. Combine flour and salt, add to mixture.
5. Add nutmeats and oats.
6. Add chocolate chips.
7. Drop by level teaspoonful onto baking sheet.
8. Bake 10 minutes (should be soft when removed)
9. Makes about 4 dozen.

Xmas Eggnog

- 12 egg whites
- 12 egg yolks
- 1 1/2 cups sugar
- 3/4 cup rye whiskey
- 12 egg whites
- 3/4 cup brandy
- 1/2 cup rum
- 1 to 2 cups heavy cream, lightly whipped
- Garnish: ground nutmeg

DIRECTIONS:

Beat the egg whites until stiff, gradually adding in 3/4 cup sugar. Set aside. Beat the egg yolks until they are thick and pale and add the other 3/4 cup sugar and stir in rye whiskey. Blend well. Fold the egg white mixture into the yolk mixture and add the brandy and the rum. Beat the mixture well. To serve, fold the lightly whipped heavy cream into the eggnog. (If a thinner mixture is desired, add the heavy cream unwhipped.) Sprinkle the top of the eggnog with the nutmeg to taste.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY PAUL G. DONOHUE, M.D.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Could you please explain the causes and problems of brain tumors? My son, now 52, is terminally ill with one. He has a recurrence of a tumor removed in 1990. I know that I am losing him. I would like to understand so I can face this better. -- L.B.

ANSWER: No one can tell you the cause of brain tumors. No one knows. The problems of brain tumors can be summed up in one word -- their location. Symptoms arise due to the portion of brain directly involved with the tumor and due to those parts of the brain indirectly involved -- parts distant from the tumor but subject to the pressure of an enlarging mass in a rigid, bony container -- the skull.

In North America this year, more than 100,000 people will discover they have a brain tumor. Of that number, 75 percent will have cancers that have spread to the brain -- metastasized -- from organs far from the brain. Cancers of the lungs, breast and colon, as well as melanomas, often find their way to the brain. The remaining 25 percent are tumors that arise directly from brain cells or cells that support brain cells.

Frequent headaches, especially those that are there upon waking from sleep, are a prominent symptom of a brain tumor. Brain tumors often create vision problems. Seizures are another clue to brain tumors.

I've dwelt on malignant brain tumors because I believe your son has such a tumor. There are other brain tumors -- benign -- that are more readily treated with great success. Meningiomas are examples of those tumors.

You, your son and all readers with an interest in brain tumors ought to turn to the American Brain Tumor Association for the latest in treatment and for information on where to obtain support. The number is (800) 886-2282.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: The report on my last chest X-ray came back with the remark that my lungs are "hyperinflated." What does this mean? Does it have anything to do with emphysema? I am 73. -- E.B.

ANSWER: A chest X-ray report that states the lungs are hyperinflated is an indication of emphysema. Don't let that throw you. A chest X-ray of almost all 73-year-olds could say the lungs are hyperinflated. A touch of emphysema comes with aging. It's called senile emphysema -- not a delicately worded phrase. This kind of emphysema rarely causes any symptoms. It's not like the emphysema that comes from smoking.

Furthermore, chest X-rays are not the most reliable tests for emphysema. Breathing tests are.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Brain Tumors Raise Pressure Within the Skull

(NAPSA) Sometimes all it takes is a change of heart and lifestyle to reduce your risk of heart disease and stroke, says The American Heart Association. The organization suggests starting with these simple steps:

- Schedule time for physical activity. Walking briskly three or four times a week for just thirty minutes can help condition your heart, control your blood pressure and increase HDL--your good cholesterol. Even being active for ten minutes, three times a day brings benefits. You don't have to be in a formal exercise program; just move.

- No ifs and or butts-stop smoking. Smoking greatly increases your heart disease risk and your risk for other diseases such as cancer and emphysema as well.

- Get regular medical checkups and follow your doctor's advice. If you need medication to control your blood pressure, cholesterol, blood sugar or for something else, take it exactly as prescribed.

- It's never too late to lower your cholesterol levels. Research has shown that lowering your cholesterol can lower your risk of heart disease.

- Focus on HDL--good cholesterol. Keep total fat intake (mainly monounsaturated fats) within 30 percent of daily calories.

- Eat a sensible diet low in saturated fat and cholesterol. Include plenty of fruits, vegetables, whole grains and low-fat or fat-free milk products. Look for the American Heart Association's heart-check mark on products identifying foods that participate in and meet the nutritional criteria of the association's Food Certification Program.

- Excess weight is a risk factor for heart disease. To avoid weight gain, balance the calories you take in with those you burn up.

- Drink only moderate amounts of alcohol (it has been suggested one drink daily for a woman, two for a man). This raises HDL levels and lowers heart disease risk.

With nearly four million volunteers, the American Heart Association is the largest voluntary health organization fighting heart disease, stroke and other cardiovascular diseases which annually kill more than 950,000 Americans. Learn more about the role of diet and nutrition in lowering your risk for heart disease and stroke by calling the association for free information, including the booklet "Shop Smart With Heart" at 1-800-242-8721, or visit the American Heart Association Web site at www.americanheart.org.

Sometimes, we do have the opportunity to make choices. Improving one's lifestyle can help improve health.

KEEP YOUR HOLIDAYS HAPPY, HEALTHY AND HEADACHE-FREE

(NAPSA)—As the holidays approach, people across the nation are looking forward to twinkling lights, festive music, sweet treats and an extra dose of family visits. But for many, these favorite holiday traditions can also bring on an unwelcome threat of headaches and for some, even a debilitating migraine headache attack.

Most people suffer from the occasional headache and an estimated 25 million Americans—75 percent of whom are women—experience much more severe migraine headaches. No matter what the type, however, experts now know that headaches can be triggered by foods, beverages or other lifestyle factors.

According to Donnica Moore, MD, founder of the Sapphire Women's Health Group, each headache sufferer has his or her own combination of personal headache triggers, which can be increasingly difficult to avoid during the holiday season.

"Although the holiday season is undeniably a happy time, it can actually be very painful for headache sufferers," says Dr. Moore. "Not only are many headache triggers more prevalent, but many of these triggers are unfortunately associated with some of the most festive holiday traditions, such as good food, wine and travel."

To avoid turning into a grinch this holiday season, Dr. Moore suggests the following solutions to prevent some of the most common holiday headaches:

- The "Last Minute Shopping" Headache (stress)

Solution—Reduce stress by planning ahead as much as possible by making lists and shopping early before the stores are crowded.

- The "Are We There Yet?" Headache (travel)

Solution—Consider the easiest routes to travel to friends or relatives. Avoid noisy and crowded forms of transportation.

- The "Decoration Overload" Migraine (twinkling lights)

Solution—Avoid bright or flashing lights from holiday decoration. Instead hang mistletoe or create beautiful centerpieces for your home with winter fruits and festive foliage.

- The "Be Everywhere" headache (lack of sleep)

Solution—Prioritize during this busy holiday season. Pick and choose a few fun activities and get plenty of rest.

- The "Overactive Perfume Counter Spritzer" headache (smell)

Solution—Rather than using colognes or perfumes, fill your home with lightly scented candles for a fragrant and festive aura.

- The "Eggroll Hors d'Oeuvres" Migraine (M.S.G.)

Solution—Instead of snacking on M.S.G.—laden appetizers, fill your plate with alternative goodies from the buffet table.

Besides avoiding personal triggers, there is more good news for headache sufferers, especially for those who suffer from migraines. "New research shows that many people can help stave off migraines by taking something for their pain as soon as they feel one coming on," says Dr. Moore. "I advise my patients to carry medication with them and keep it in their car or office. For people who require prescription medications, there are several new ones they can learn about from their doctors."

"And of course, see a doctor if your headaches become more frequent or severe," advises Dr. Moore.

Planning ahead during the holiday season may help you avoid a headache.

Change goes in. Change comes out.

Year-round, The Salvation Army takes the money you give and uses it to make wonderful changes all over the country. Last year alone, we assisted over 26 million individuals in a variety of ways. We supplied food to the hungry, clothing and shelter for the homeless, sent children to summer camp, provided relief for disaster victims across the country, and much more. Of course, we can't make our contribution without yours. So give to The Salvation Army now and throughout the year. We promise, you'll get change back.

***All Saturday classes that meet from 2:00pm-4:40pm will offer exams during this period.

Instructors that teach classes on Sunday are requested to contact the Office of the Registrar to schedule a room for an exam (973) 720-2239.

MULTI-SECTION: A multi-section exam is defined as an agreement by faculty who teach more than one section of the same titled course to offer one collective exam for those sections. To offer a collective exam requires departmental approval.

SPLIT ROOMS: Courses meeting in split rooms (different rooms each day of the class session) should give their exam in the room used on the first class day of the week.
